Ronan and the Grey Man of Luachair had been slain by Fionn. Their sons, Aodh Rinn and Conan, had made peace with Fionn and joined his Fiana. [Fionn distrusted such reconciliations; and in this story he appears to contrive the death of Aodh and Conan.] Aodh had retired to live in his stronghold. His daughter Eargna alone bore him company. He loved her dearly; and lest he should have to part with her, he proclaimed his resolve to kill any hero who should ask her of him to wife. His special vanity was to pride himself on fidelity to his vows. The wife of Conan died, and Fionn took the opportunity of advising Conan to marry Eargna [expecting his death or Aodh's to be the result of the suit]. Conan went wooing, and brought with him a strong armed force supplied by Fionn. It happened that Aodh just then was away from home. Conan carried off the girl and made her his wife. Aodh, returning, declared himself satisfied with the match. There had been no suit. His vow therefore remained intact, and Fionn's design was frustrated. Aodh returned to the Fiana, and took occasion in Fionn's presence to boast of his unbroken vows. Fionn understood the cause of the boast, and turned it to advantage. He replied by taunting Aodh with having allowed the abduction of his daughter, and having neglected to punish the offender. The truth of the taunt was undeniable. Aodh in his anger could only say that he would kill Conan. Fionn desired no mere feud, but an instantaduel. He therefore besought Aodh to be satisfied with lawful compensation for the wrong. Meanwhile Conan had lost his bride. She was taken from him by Oisin son of Fionn. Mad with jealousy, he was not likely to pay compensation for a stolen wife. He refused to pay; and Aodh's only alternative was a challenge to combat. The duel resulted in the death of both heroes. Those who allowed the quarrel to take place are denounced by the poet, who has in mind no doubt the part played by Fionn. It is a story devoted to the dark side of Fionn's character.
Text Trans. ..... page pageII. Fionn's Foray to Tara,
At a feast which Fionn and his friends attended in Tara, Cormac the king, having drunk deep, challenged Fionn to a duel. Fionn put aside the challenge, reminding the king of his ill success in former quarrels. Cormac retorted with the victory of his father over Fionn's father. This opening of the old wound provoked a bitter ${ }^{3}$ discussion, which would have ended in blows, had not Ciothruaidh the musician interposed with his chant. Fionn and Cormac parted to prepare for war. Fionn made an alliance with Aonghus the god of Brugh. He then raided the lands of Tara and carried off Cormac's cattle-the usual form of a challenge to war. Cormac came in pursuit. Aonghus alone tended the prey, leaving the Fiana free to face the king. They defeated Cormac, and captured his son Cairbre, refusing to release Cairbre until the king should "go under the fork of the caldron." But lest the story should represent the king of Ireland as subject to Fionn, it makes Fionn magnanimous enough to go himself under the fork at the same time.
III. The Rowan-Tree of Clonfert, . . . 7102
Goll, having gone to war with Fionn, retires into South Connacht, his own country, and keeps guard on the fords of the Shannon. Fionn reaches the river by night, and hears the mighty sound of Goll's snoring, for, worn out with many watches, Goll had at length fallen asleep. Crossing the river alone, Fionn comes up to his sleeping enemy and stands over him with drawn sword. Goll awakes and grasps his spear. Fionn calmly reminds him: "Long since I might have cut off thy head,' and tells him to prepare for battle. At this moment, a large body of Goll's forces take their stand between Fionn and the river. It is Fionn now who is at the mercy of his enemy ; but Goll repays the debt by escorting Fionn safely back to his army. Then the battle begins, and in the end Goll is forced to retreat. He makes a stout defence, and draws off in good order.

IV. The Battle of Cronnmhón,

The story of the previous lay retold. This is a later version. Fionn has to arm Goll for the combat, Goll being evidently seen as a mail-clad knight of the Norman period. Except for the sleeping episode, which takes a new form, the tale consists mainly of a list of the divisions of the Fiana and their fortunes in the battle. Goll inflicts terrible loss on them all and suffers none, but is nevertheless driven from the field. The topography is no less lacking in verisimilitude. Fionn attacks Goll from the south, and drives him across the Sbannon, apparently as far as "Dovea," now a village in Tipperary.

V. The Bathing of Oisin's Head, . . . 14111
Oisin laments his better days, and tells of the hidden treasures of the Fiana. The occasion is the washing of his head by a woman, possibly a traditional rite of pagan significance. The poet sets it in contrast to baptism.
VI. The Fray at Loch Luig, . . . . 17114
A conflict between some of the Fiana and some of Cormac's people. The Fiana are victorious. The cause is afterwards referred to Cormac's judges, who decide in favour of the Fiana.
VII. Caoilte's Mischief-Making, ..... 116
Fionn is with Cormac at Tara, where he is apparently held as a hostage. Caoilte keeps up a sort of freakish warfare in the country, setting loose calves and horses, burning mills and kilns, &e. Then he enters Tara, where he disguises himself as a candle-bearer to the king, and continues the series of vexatious pranks indoors. Next day he asks Cormac to fix a ransom for Fionn, whose release was doubtless the object of the previous performances. Cormac thinks that so clever a champion should get an appropriate task, and the ransom claimed is one or a pair of various kinds of wild beast or bird. Caoilte, the swift-footed, succeeds in performing the task. The list of animals is much smaller here than in the Dean of Lismore's version.
VIII. The Crane-Bag, . . . . . . 21118
Aoife daughter of Dealbhaoth (a divinity) was changed into a crane by her jealous rival Iuchra. The crane lived and died in the household of Manannan; and by him its skin was made into a magic bag, of which the contents were visible only at high water. The poem, which is incomplete, goes on to name the owners of this treasure in succession to Manannan. The Crune-bag is mentioned in the Macgninartha, but the special interest attaching to it is obscure.

IX. Goll's Malediction, ..... $22 \quad 120$Goll, at his last stand, leaves his curse on the Houseof Baoisgne.
X. Goll's Parting with his Wife, ..... $23 \quad 121$Goll is driven to bay on a rocky promontory of thesea. His wife alone stays by him. Without hope ofescape from death, he advises her to go back to theFiana, and take another husband. She refuses to leavehim. He complains that he is overcome not by valourbut by hunger and thirst. She counsels him to eat theflesh of his dead assailants, and to drink the milk of herbreasts; but his geasa forbid him to obey the advice of awoman.
XI. The Kindred of Fionn, ..... $24 \quad 123$
A partial genealogy of the house of Baoisgne. Fionn's pedigree here (son of Cumhall, son of Fergus Luaithfhionn called also Baoisgne, son of Trenmor, other- wise called Fionn File) is quite different from each of the pedigrees cited from Mac Fir-Bhisigh in the Introduction to this volume. The duplication of Fionn may arise from an effort to harmonize two chrono- logies.
XII. The Household of Almha, ..... $25 \quad 124$
An account of the great house of Almha, amounting to little more than an inventory of its chief treasures and a list of the leaders of the Fiana.
XIII. The Headless Phantons, ..... $28 \quad 127$
Fiacha, king of Munster, holds assembly at Loch Goir. In the horse-racing, the druid Dil Mac Da Chreg wins the three chief prizes with his black horse. Fiacha buys the horse and presents it to Fionn. Three days later, Fionn takes leave of Fiacha. Caoilte and Oisin go with him; and he tries the speed of his new horse against their horses. After a long ride through the mountains of West Munster, they reach a lonely valley in the evening. Here they find a house where no house stood before. Upon their approach, the householder, a grisly Churl, welcomes them. They enter. The Churl calls on his household to sing for the guests. Nine heads on one side, nine headless bodies on the other, start up and begin a hideous chorus. Meanwhile the Churl, taking his hatchet, kills the horses on which his guests had come, cuts them up and sets the joints to roast at the fire. By-and-by, he offers a piece of the horseflesh, still on the spit, to Fionn to eat. Fionn declines. The Churl takes the refusal as an insult and a challenge. He puts out every light, even the glow of the embers: and in the darkness the crew of monsters fall upon the three heroes. The fight lasts all through the night; and at the first ray of sunlight, the combatants on both sides sink to the ground in a trance. When Fionn and his comrades recover, they find themselves and their horses whole and sound, but the house and its inhabitants have vanished. These were malignant phantoms whose sister had been slain by the Fiana in the Cave of Ceis Corann. [Their inability to do physical mischief is noteworthy.]

XIV. The Enchanted Stag, . . . 30130
Donn, of divine race, carried off a hundred maidens from the "sidh" of Aodh. Aodh's wife loved Donn in secret. She changed his captives into a hundred does. She then invited Donn to a tryst. He refused to meet her; and she changed him into a mighty stag. Donn retained his speech, and once defied the Fiana to come in chase against him. They came, but Fionn shirked the encounter. Oisin, aided by Fionn's two hounds, themselves metamorphosed beings, at length killed the stag.
XV. The Boyhood of Fionn, . . . . . 33133

A kind of abridgment of part of the Macgnimartha. The high king Conn appears in the poem, but is absent from the more ancient prose tale.
XVI. The Shield of Fionn, . . . . . 34134

When Lugh overcame his grandfather Balor, he stuck Balor's head in the fork of a hazel. The drip from the head split and withered up the tree. Fifty years later Manannan had the hazel cut down. In felling it, twice nine men were killed and nine more were blinded by its poisonous vapours. Manannan had the frame of a shield built up of the branches. Bearing this shield, he won many battles. Others, kings and heroes in many lands, succeeded to the ownership of the shield, until it came at length to Fionn. But when the gods were overthrown by Patrick, the shield was burnt before Oisin's eyes by a swineherd.

Description of Caoilte's enchanted situla. Praise of Caoilte. Story of the goblet: A great hunting was held by Fionn. The heroes and their hounds are recounted. A fierce boar was roused by Fionn, but defied hounds and weapons until Bran was let loose. When the boar was brought to his last stand, the Churl of the Hill appeared. He carried off the boar on his shoulders, and called on Fionn to continue the pursuit. Fionn with a few companions followed the Churl, who led them far and at last disappeared in the sidh of Gleann Deichead. The heroes entered the sidh in pursuit. They found themselves in a banquet-hall amid a brilliant company. The Churl was Enna, ruler of the sidh. The boar became a handsome youth, his son. Enna welcomed the heroes, and bade them sit at the feast. He gave his lovely daughter Sgathach in wedlock for a year to Fionn, and gave him also many gifts of rare value, among them the situla. Sgathach's musical art caused the heroes to fall into a trance. When they awoke on the morrow, they found themselves at Bearnas, far away from the sidh; but the precious gifts of Enna were still with them. Moreover, the rest of the Fiana coming up declared that they had been separated only a short time, and the day was not yet spent. Fionn divided the treasures, giving the situla to Caoilte. One day the goblet fell into a deep pool and could not be recovered. In after-days, when Patrick came, he blessed the stream, and thereupon a salmon rose to the brink bearing the goblet in its mouth. [The later Celts of the Iron Age succeeded a race who buried their noble dead in sepulchral chambers of stone surmounted by huge mounds of earth. The bodies were often placed sitting as if at a feast, and probably food-vessels were set before them. Foodvessels certainly accompanied urn-burial. From the discovery of such tombs may well have arisen stories like the present one, and indeed the whole tradition of the sidh and its occupants. That some discoveries took place, and that the sepulchral chambers were thought to be worth robbing by Norse and native princes, is sufficiently proved by the Annals.]
XVIII. The Daughter of Diarnaid, . . . . 45149

This lay is a sequel to the story of Diarmaid. His daughter, accompanied by her three brothers, made furious war-on Fionn to avenge their father. The girl challenged Fionn to single combat, and got the better of him. Daolgus, unfairly trying to save Fionn, was cut down by her sword. Then Oisin and Caoilte intervene to protect their chief, and finally Lodborn, a fifth adversary, kills the young heroine.

CONTENTS AND ARGUMENT.

XIX. Lament for the Fiana, ..... 47151Oisin tells of the destruction of the Fiana and the deathof their chieftains.
XX. The Sword of Oscar, ..... 49 ..... 153
Oscar's sword first belonged in succession to various personages of the Greek mythology and legend, then to heroes of Roman story, then to a number of Irish heroes, and finally to a clerk of Patrick's following, who bought it of a smith's helper.
XXI. The Battle of the Sheaves, ..... 55 ..... 162
Oisin, standing over the grave of his son Oscar, tells of Oscar's exploits, and in particular of the Battle of the Sheaves. Fionn held a chase near Tara. A little deer outran the hounds, and took refuge in a great field of ripe corn belonging to Caoilte's wife. Fionn called on his followers to reap the field so that they might take the deer, and at the same time do a helpful turn to the lady. As they were reaping, a great force of Norsemen suddenly approached. Caoilte hastened to Tara, and brought back the weapons of the Fiana before the Norsemen could attack. The Fiana, led by Oscar, routed the invaders. Oisin concludes by directing how Oscar and his comrade, MacLughach, are to be laid in the grave.
XXII. The Death of Goll, ..... $58 \quad 165$
Oisin tells Cinaoth about Goll's last stand on the rock. He then begins the story of the final war between Goll and the House of Baoisgne. For many years the two parties lived in perfect amity. The House of Morna was accorderi many privileges among the Fiana. One privilege was the right to have all the marrowbones at every feast. One day as they sat feasting, Caireall Ua Conbhroin arrived fronı Scotland, and joined the party. He asked why all the marrowbones were given to the Sons of Morna; and on being answered, declared that he would not yield them that privilege. Thereupon a dispute arose, and angry references were made to the original feud of Cnucha. At this point the poem breaks off unfinished.
XXIII. The Adventure of the Men from Sorcha, . 61170
Fionn invited the high king Cormac to a feast. During the feast, a "Gruagach" (a long-haired hero of uncertain attributes, nowadays a sort of genial wizard or warlock) entered, followed by a slave, who carried a caldron. The stranger demanded the full of the caldron of gold "to see who of the men of Ireland was best at bestowing." Fionn granted the demand, and then asked the visitors who they were. The slave answered that he was Fear Dochair, from Sorcha in the east, and that the Gruagach was his son, whom he extolled above all men. Between them and the Fiana a contest in boasting arose, and presently they came to threats. Fionn checked the quarrel, and sent eight heroes to escort the strangers all the way to their own country. Here the escort was feasted bravely; and at this feast another word-war began, and ended in blows. The Irish heroes slew many of their assailants, and escaped to their ship. When they returned to Ireland, Oscar fitted out an expedition against the men of Sorcha; but before going thither he invaded and conquered all the great kingdoms of the world. The Fiana then attacked and overcame the people of Sorcha, and killed their king (the slave) and his son, the Gruagach. Concluding, Oisin laments the disappearance of the Fiana, and is adjured by Patrick to practise piety and reason.

Fionn held a chase on Sliabh Truim. The names of the principal heroes and their hounds are told. An immense slaughter of game was made. Goll divided the game, and forgot to set apart a portion for Oisin and himself. Oisin reproached him angrily. Fionn made peace between them. The Fiana then journeyed to Loch Cuan, where they encountered a terrible sea-monster with human voice. The monster killed many of the Fiana, and swallowed alive others, including Fionn. Fionn cut his way out through the side of the beast, attacked it again and killed it. A list follows of the monsters killed at various times by Fionn, and the poem breaks off incomplete.
XXV. Once I was Yellow-haired, ..... $80 \quad 194$
Oisin grieves over the lost beauty of his flowing hair.
XXVI. Woe for them that wait on Churchmen, ..... $81 \quad 194$Oisin deplores the exchange of his spear for a monk'sstaff.
XXVII. Oisin's Sorrow, ..... $81 \quad 194$
Oisin addresses Caoilte, bewailing the loss of the Fiana.
XXVIII. Three Heroes went we to the Chase, ..... 81 ..... 195
One of the heroes briefly recalls the story of a stag-hunt.
XXIX. Erect your Hunting Spears, ..... 82 ..... 195
Oisin in his old age excites his countrymen to attack the Lochlann enemy.
XXX. The Hunger of Críonloch's Church, ..... 82195
Oisin complains of hunger in the church of Crionloch.
XXXI. The Wry Rowan, ..... $82 \quad 196$
Oisin, old and blind, and compelled to fast, asks a swineherd to guide him to a certain rowan tree, that he may feast on its berries.
XXXII. The Beagle's Cry, ..... 196
The aged Oisin rejoices in the memories aroused by the baying of a hound.
XXXIII. The Sleep-Song for Diarmaid, ..... $84 \quad 197$
Grainne sings a sleep-song for Diarmaid. Though she wishes him to sleep soundly, she notes that all the animals of the wilds are awake and restless [for the place is surrounded by the pursuers of Diarmaid].
XXXIV. Fionn's Prophecy, . ..... $85 \quad 198$Fionn foretells the occupation of Ireland by theforeigners, and the final triumph of the Irish.
XXXV. The War-Vaunt of Goll, ..... 86 ..... 200
Goli, hemmed in on a sea-crag by Fionn, recalls his ownexploits. He begins by telling his triumphs over theHouse of Baoisgne. Then he takes up the story of his life.He was head of the Fians of Ireland, under Conn theard-ri. Cumhall's sister was fostermother to Conn. CathairMór, king of Leinster, was Cumhall's nephew, and waskilled in battle by Goll. Conn appointed Cumhall to thecommand of the Galians. Having thus acquired greatpower, Cumhall placed Goll under a ban, and forced him tobecome a refugee. Goll sought protection from one kingafter another, but all denied him. He then left Ireland,bringing the warriors of his kindred with him. Throughhis prowess and theirs, he secured a foothold successivelyin Wales, in Norway, in Scotland, in England, and inFrance; but Cumhall followed him, and caused him to bebanished from each of these countries in turn. Goll wentback again to Norway, and found peace there." At length,Cumhall rebelled against the ard-ri, Conn, who summonedthe House of Morna to his aid. The Battle of Cnuchafollowed, in which Cumhall was slain. The headship ofthe Fians was then restored to Goll, who for ten yearsfreed Ireland from fierce reptiles, enchanted monsters, andforeign enemies. Thereafter Conn gave the headship of theFians to Fionn son of Cumball, but left one third of themunder Goll's command. Goll tells how he saved Fionn fromthe three witches in the Cave of Ceis Corainn. Goll re-mained in friendship with Fionn until Fionn killed Goll'sson Feadha, whose mother was Cainche daughter of Fionn.

INTRODUCTION.

1. The Manuscript.

The manuscript containing "Duanaire Finn" is now in the Franciscan Library in Dublin. When I began to transcribe the poems in 1897, the original binding was almost worn away, and the leares, which are naper folio, were loose. The margins of the first few pages were frayed away; and all the paper was in a state of incipient decay. Since then the present custodians have had the volume carefully rebound in vellum, bearing on the back the title

SGEULTA.
DUANAIRE FINN.
The ferw frayed portions have been mounted in transparent paper, and the whole ms. has been interleaved.

The writing is everywhere distinct. Some of the pages have suffered from what looks like oil-staining, but are none the less legible.

The contents of the ms. are as follows :-
I. A fine copy of "Agallamh na Senórach," which, howeter, breaks off incomplete on the 257 th page. It should be nbserved that the pagination is by folios, or rather leaves. The pagenumbers are written unly on the right-hand page of each folio. There are, therefore, two pages for each number. In referring to the pagination, I indicate the page which bears the number by the letter a (thus 1a); and the reverse of the leaf (or the first page of the succeeding folio) by the letter $\beta$ (thuns $1 \beta$ ). Accordingly the page on which the Agallamb breaks off is 129 a
II. Fragment of a story, bearing a rery long title. about Fionn, ()scar, and Maghnus son of the king of Lochlainn, commencing on $129 \beta$, and breaking off on its third pase, 130/5. From this to $239 \beta$ the pages are blank.
III. Duanaire Fim. An unnumbered page bears the heading, eridently added by a later hand, "Clap Ounarpe Fino anpo prop" -"The following is the Poem-book of Fiomn." The same page contains the index, referring to the poems, sixty-eight in number, by the initial line of each poem, and the page on which the poem begins. The index is in the handwriting of the scribe of the Duanaire.
IV. On the last two pages is a poem written by a poor friar, "bpátur boć,$"$ complaining that, having journeyed from London to Cnoc Sainpaio (= Summer Hill) on a visit to the master of the place, the writer was inhospitably received. Though he had sent tidings of his coming, the expected host was not there to welcome him.

The history of the ars. will be understood from the following notes by its principal scribes:-
 pe Nall ठnuamoa oo éSonarple Mac Oonnaıll anorporn 7 auzur 1626." "This book is begun to be written by Niall Gruamdha (i.e. the morose) for Somhairle Mac Donnell, now the 7th of August 1626."

On page $97 a$. " 2 Oerempep 1626 a Lobán oon leabappa oa rбъıbhaó pe Nıall O Cazh[áın]. Ilım זpocaıpe." "On December 2nd, 1626, at Louvain, is this book a-writing by Niall O'Cathain. I beseech mercy."

The writing of this scribe ceases with $109 \beta$. It is in a clear but somewhat peculiar hand.

A new scribe takes up the Agallamh where Niall Gruamdha has left off. He is the scribe of the Duanaire. He continues the Agallamh to the point where it breaks off unfinished.

A third and inferior hand, for which there is no signature, writes the fragment of the story of Maghnus Mór.

On page $39 \beta$ of the Duanaire, the scribe writes: " $\mathrm{C}_{\delta}$ pin ouı a caıprín Samaıle azur nı feouım nıopa mo oo rбрıbaঠ anuaıpı б buaı́реó in ćpeṙa." "There you have it, Captain Somhairle ; and I am unable to write any more at present from the trouble of the ague" (or perhaps "writer's cramp "). The note, however, is written in a firm, clear hand.

On page $74 \alpha$ he writes: " $A_{\delta}$ pin ouiz a ċaıpzín Samaiple azur oa ffá̇uınn nı baó mo ina pın oo Óuanaıne Finn pé na ropiob. Anoipoin in 12 Febpuapi 1627." "There you have it, Captain Sombairle ; and if I got more of the Poem-book of Fionn to write, I would do it for you [he emphasizes the pronoun]. I am Aodh O'Dochartaigh who wrote it. It is now the 12 th of February, 1627."

On page $93 a$ he writes: "Oa fpaб́aınn ní baó mo ma
 "If I got more than I have got, I would write them. This is the 6th August, 1627." He added only one more poem occupying two pages.

The first scribe does not sign his surname in full, but writes it thrice O Carh-. It might be O Cathail ( $O^{\prime}$ Cahill), but is more probably O'Cathain. The whole us. was transcribed for Captain Somhairle Mac Donnell. The Mac Donnell country was the Route and the Glens, making together the ancient territory of Dál Riada, the northern half of County Antrim. The country of O'Cathain (O'Kane) was separated from the Route by the River Bann. The country of O'Dochartaigh (O'Doherty) was Inishowen, quite near to both. Captain Mac Donnell was probably serving at the time, 16261627 , in the Netherlands. He was evidently a lover of Irish literature; and the copying of these two great bodies of Fenian epic, the Colloquy and the Poem-book, was undertaken for him by two Irish scribes then living in Louvain. One of them was certainly a Franciscan; the other was probably a Franciscan also. The Franciscans at this time, fleeing from persecution in Ireland, brought many Irish mss. to Louvain. The two scribes who wrote the ms. for Captain Mac Donnell are likely to have been on specially friendly terms with him. If the friendship arose from home connexions, then O'Cathain was probably the surname of Niall Gruamdha. The comradeship of the MacDonnells and O'Ranes was signalised a few years later, on the outbreak of the Civil War in Scotland, when the heroic Alasdair Mac Donnell and Colonel Maghnus O'Kane, at the head of their Irish regiments, were the principal factors in the victories of Montrose's campaign against the Covenanters and Argyll.

Somhairle, englished Sorley, was a favourite name of the Mac Donnells. Sombairle Buidhe, chieftain of the Antrim Mac Donnells, was a strong antagonist of the early encroachments of Elizabeth, to whose representatives he declared "plainly that the English had no right to be in Ireland." He was dead many years before the date of this as. Another Sombairle Mac Domnell fell on the Irish side in the fatal Battle of Aughrim. His fame has come down to us in the dirge written for him by Seamas Mac Cuarta, "1 ne(iċópurm an árp at(ír) na jconimabo." He is of too late a date to be identical with Captain Sombairle to whose passion for Irish hero-lore we owe the preservation of Duanaire Finn.

From the statements of the scribe Aodh O Dochartaigh quoted above, it is clear that the sources from which he copied the poems came to him in instalments. Indeed, this scribe may have been the first who embodied the sixty-eight poems in one collection. At all events, they cannot have been brought together very long before his time, for one of the poems is found in the Book of Leinster, others seem of nearly equal age, while still others are fairly modern. So far as I have been able to observe, the poems towards the end of the collection are, in general, more modern than those towards the beginning. There is no other sequence observable. However, until the entire collection is dealt with, it is better not to attempt to draw definite conclusions.

The history of the Duanaire is remarkable. The materials first existed in ars. in Ireland. Thence they were carried by refugees to Louvain. A transcript was made of them in Louvain for an Irish soldier. The originals are now lost. This transcript, if it came into possession of Captain Mac Donnell, found its way back to the Franciscans of Louvain. In 1718, one Labhrás 0 Cathaláin, whose name would be englished Laurence Callan, wrote his name on a fly-leaf. In 1792 , the use of the volume was given by the Franciscan Superiors to a friar named Domhnall Maglábhuin (in English form Daniel Maglone), as a note on the fly-leaf states: "Oо bıঠ̀ upao an leabaıp po az an bраг்aи boċt Oominall lilazlábum or Maglone ne eorl na nucićrpan an blıá̈an oaoır an てıঠ̈rna 1792." "The poor friar D. M. had the use of this book by permission of the Superiors, the year of the age of the Lord 1792." Soon afterwards, fearing the dangers of the French Revolution, the ms., with others in the Franciscan library at Louvain, was removed to St. Isidore's at Rome. Before the Italians entered Rome, the remnants of the Irish collection were sent to the Franciscan Convent, Merchants' Quay, Dublin, where they remain.

On the last page of the ws. there is a note in English and Flemish: "To Sister Sumusset att the English geresan in Lier." "Voor Suster Sumuset in de English gresan tot Lier." It is not likely that this note has any reference to the destination of the ms. Such a direction would not be written inside the volume on the final page. The note is probably a memorandum of address to be used in sending messages.

The fortunes of war have driven these poems from their native land to Belgium, from Belgium to Italy, from Italy back to their native land. The clash of arms sounds within and around them, from the dedication to the Irish captain on their first page to the mention of the English garrison of Lier on their last. It is time to place them beyond the risks of battle. In the task of bringing them at length to the security of the printing press, my satisfaction has not been diminished by the reflection that their first rescue from destruction seems due to the patriotism and literary taste of an Irish soldier from my natire glens of Dál Riada.

2. The Present Text.

In 1897, I began to transcribe Duanaire Finn, in order that, like Captain Somhairle, I might have the pleasure of reading it and keeping it. The Fenian lays appealed strongly to me before this time ; and I was delighted to come upon a hoard of them containing many nowhere else to be found. I kept copying them in odd snatches of time extending over a year or two. When I told Miss Eleanor Hull of the treasure, she induced me to undertake to edit the poems for the Irish Texts Society. It was a task that I ought not to have assumed, for I had but little time to carry it out. In copying the poems for my own use, I had not troubled to follow all the orthographical vagaries of the scribe; for, as will be seen, he has written these Middle-Irish compositions in a spelling that is sometimes ancient, sometimes modern, nowise consistent. I was satisfied to copy them with sufficient fidelity to be able to read them as I found them.

The late Professor York Powell expressed a rery strong opinion, which was recognized as quite just by the Irish Texts Society and by myself, that in publishing the poems, the as. should be reproduced as closely as possible. Accordingly, I have now aimed at setting the text out as it appears in the ms,, at least as faithfully as the type will allow. This necessitated a fresh word-for-word comparison and correction of the first transcript, and doubled the work of transcribing. Less robust health and many urgent duties interfered with this task, and with the subsequent work of translation into English. These statements, though personal, are due from me to the members of the Irish Texts Society as an apology for the protracted delay that has occurred between the announcement of this volume and its publication. The work has been entirely congenial to me; and in begging some indulgence, I add the plea that I have felt perhaps as keenly as any the pains of postponement.

The present volume contains about a measured half of the total matter of the Duanaire. In translating, I have endeavoured to keep very close to the original, yet to embody the sense in English idiom, since neither the original nor the translation can be benefited by the forcing of Irish idioms on English versions. Nevertheless, I am conscious that my translation falls very far short of giving a fair idea of the Irish text. There are mannerisms, repetitions, chevilles, and the like, peculiar to Middle-Trish poetry, and quite natural to it, which cannot possibly be translated without disfigurement, and yet which cannot be omitted from the translation. The ancient quatrain of seven-syllabled lines was not an ideal form for heroic narrative. The Irish metres required each line to give nearly complete sense. In the couplet, the approach to completion of sense had to be still nearer. In the quatrain it had to be perfect. The poet knew this instinctively, and shaped his diction accordingly. The hearer or reader also felt the necessity from the purely technical standpoint, and was therefore the less displeased at the stress of metrical obligations on the narrative. There was at least the great satisfaction of perfection in the verse-form. In a translation, all the advantages of the metre and its familiar concomitants are lost; all the disadvantages are accentuated. Then, English as known to me is often quite at a loss to provide equivalents for the original diction.

The notes to this volume are confined to the minimum necessary to justify the translation. They contain chiefly emendations, mostly obvious, of the text where it appears to have been injured by the scribe or his predecessors. Want of time constrains me to this minimum ; but I regret the limitation the less since, until the whole of the Duanaire is ready for publication, I feel that it would be rash to attempt a fuller annotation of the half.

The text departs from exact reproduction of the ms. chiefly in mere typographical details, such as the use of capitals and punctuation. It is not possible, without disfiguring the pages, to indicate the Editor's part in expanding contractions. Wherever a reasonable doubt existed as to the meaning, I have sought to indicate it in the translation by a mark of query-perhaps not sufficiently often.

Students of modern Irish will bear in mind that the poems are in Middle Irish, with the spelling somewhat modernised. Very often the older spelling is retained; for the scribe Aodh 0 Dochartaigh was a pretty good scholar, and fairly familiar with late Middle Irish. Thus he often writes such forms as co, now jo, following his original. He often writes e for ea, and sometimes for el. For 1 a he sometimes writes re-e.g., iepnoró = 1 appa1o. This corresponds to a pronunciation which I have noted in Tyrone, appaıס sounding like 'ee-yerry' rapidly pronounced. His form pбrıbebumn, for pбríobfainn, in a sentence of his own quoted above, is, I fear, a pseudo-archaism invented for the occasion to make an impression on his honest patron, the Captain. A close linguistic study of the poems will hardly repay any but students of Middle Irish; and these will have little difficulty in correcting at sight most of the various minor defections from grammatical form that have been left unnoted. On the other liand, the text, like almost all the literature of the Fenian epic, is so free from extreme archaisms that a proficient student of modern Irish will be able to follow the sense of it nearly every where. This modernism of the Fenian sagas is one of their leading characteristics. They were written for the people, not for the learned few. Hence they embody for the most part the usage of the times to which they belong. I have found whole pieces of the text retained almost verbatim in present-day folklore. This fact, with others that I have observed, convinces me that much of what passes for simple folklore has come to the people from literary sources. Judging from Campbell's Leabhur na Féime, I should say that the bulk of the Fenian sagas reached Scotland in this way.

Origin of the Fenian Epic Cycle.

In seeking to trase the Fenian cycle to its source, we camnot expect much guidance from its later developments. The history of this body of literature is altogether in contrast to the history of the Ulidian sagas. Táin Bó Cualnge was "recovered," we are told, by the literati of Ireland in the reign of Guaire, king of Connacht, about the middle of the seventh century. There can be no doubt that the Tain Bó Cualnge was the work of Ulidian authors, and was preserved by the literary caste attached to the Ulidian dynasty. In the seventh century, the once powerful Ulidian aristocracy was represented by a single great sept, the Dál Fiatach, then settled in the Pictish territory of Dál Araide. By the time when the political order set forth in the Book of Rights had come about-that is, in the tenth century-the Dál Fiatach was no longer a ruling race, and the Ulidians had become completely fused with the Picts. The decline of the Dál Fiatach probably dates from the Battle of Ard Corann, a.d. 627, in which Fiachna (son of Deman), king of Dál Fiatach, was overthrown and slain by the Dál Riatai, an Ivernian or Pictish race occupying the northern half of the present county of Antrim. It was just about this time that the poets of the dominant Milesian race, ${ }^{1}$ who had "forgotten" the Ulidian epic, discovered it anew by the aid of the hero Fergus, whose spirit arose from the tomb and dictated to the poets the words of the lost saga. The legend indicates that about this time the literati of the northern Milesians learned the Ulidian sagas from the surviving literati of the well-nigh extinct Clidian dynasty. As they got it, so they lept it. The Ulidian tales are the product of the Old-Irish period, and underwent little development at the hands of their new possessors. Their tradition reproduces consistently a racial and political order, dating from not later than the third century, and prior to the occupation of Meath by the race which, in the fourth and later centuries, made a gradual conquest of the northern half of Ireland, except the region now included in the counties of Down and Antrim.

[^0]On the other hand, the greater part of the Fenian cycle, as we have it, was composed from the ninth century onward. Only a few scraps of it belong to the Old-Irish period. It underwent continuous literary development down even to the nineteenth century. Nost of it, as we know it, dates from the eleventh century onwards, its language being chiefly late Middle Irish, shading off into modern Irish. As in Duanaire Finn, we constantly find this Middle Irish in a modernised guise. But we do not find in the Fenian cycle those constant evidences of Old-Irish originals written up into Niddle-Irish form which are characteristic of the Ulidian cycle. The inference is that the Middle-Irish specimens of the Fenian cycle are true contemporary products, the work of Middle-Irish authors, just as Laoilh Oisin i llir na no! is a product of the eighteenth century. In the Middle-Irish period the story of Fionn was known all over Ireland. It was growing into literature in places far apart. The under-story of Diarmaid was developing in West Munster, the under-story of Goll in Connacht. A clear light on the origin of the epic is little more to be expected from these Middle-Irish developments than from the eighteenth-century poem by Micheál Coimín.

Where, then, are we to look for the evidences of the rise of the epic? Obviously in the oldest extant specimens. The short poems published by Windisch in his "Irische Texte" help us little. However, they are not without historical value. It is at once clear to anyone examining them that they are not the beginnings of a new literature, but rather overgrowths of a body of literature already in existence and considerably developed. Similar short poems in late Middle Irish will be found in the Duanaire. In both cases these compositions owe their existence and their contemporary interest to the co-existence of an extensive tradition with which the reader is presumed to be familiar. Hence the presence of a single such piece in Old Irish seems to dispose once and for all of the notion that the Fenian epic owes its origin to the Norse invasions.

Next, or beside these poems, the most ancient specimen of the Fenian cycle that has reached us is apparently the tale called "Macgnimartha Find," "The Boy-deeds of Fionn." The evidence borne by this tale is very striking and, in my opinion, quite decisive. The tale is preserved in a Bodleian ms. which professes to be an excerpt from the Psalter of Cashel.

The date of the Psalter of Cashel is traditionally the time of the king-bishop of Cashel, Cormac son of Cuilennán, by whom the Psalter is said to have been compiled, that is to say, about A.D. 900. This famous compilation has long since disappeared; but many extracts from it, some of them of considerable extent, have been preserved by transcription into later arss. Of these extracts, one of the most notable is the Book of Rights, which affords, I think, decisive evidence of the date of the Psalter. ${ }^{1}$

The Book of Rights contains three poems written, as O'Donovan recognized, in support of the claim of a king of Cashel to the suzerainty of all Ireland. These poems commence respectively on pages 32,52, and 124 of O'Donovan's printed edition. O'Donoran, in his Introduction (p. xv), points out that this claim can only be ascribed to one of three kings of Cashel-Cathal, who died in 742 ; Feidlimid, who died in 847 ; and Brian Bórama, who made good the claim. O'Donovan does not decide between them, but there can be no doubt upon the matter. The second of the three poems in question appeals to Selbach in sai, Selbach, the man of letters, who, as the note on p. 60 says, was contemporary with Cormac, the bishop-king. As Cormac reigned half a century after Feidlimid, the mention of Selbach shuts out both Cathal and Feidlimid, and makes it certain that the three poems were composed in the interest of Brian, and during the period when he was aiming at the high-kingship, which he secured in 1002.

The third poem enables us to date still more closely these political manifestoes. It is written in hostility to the dynasty of Tara, the Ui Néill, and in friendship to the Norse of Dublin, in whose favour it commits a flagrant and daring falsification of history. The Norse of Dublin at this period were in alliance with the king of Leinster ; and Brian was at war with both as late as 999, when he defeated the allies at Glenn Mama. After this victory

[^1]he adoptei a new policy, securing an alliance with the Dublin Norse against the high-king Mael Sechnaill. In furtherance of this policy lhe gave his daughter in marriage to Sitric, king of Dublin, and himself married the mother of Sitric. In the year 1000 , in conjunction with the Norsemen and the Leinstermen, Brian invaded Meath. We cannot be far wrong in setting down 1000 as the date of this third poem and the approximate date of the other two. These portions of the Book of Pights have their date thus ascertained.

The first and second of the three poems are found in the section of the Book of Rights devoted to the political order of Munster. But it can be shown that they were interpolated in this section. Each of the overkingdoms of Ireland has a separate section in the work, containing in each case two poems, ${ }^{1}$ one of which recites the tributes due from the subject states to the overking, the other the "stipends" or suzerain gifts accepted by the petty kings from the overling in token of allegiance. In addition to the two poems composed in furtherance of Brian's policy, the Munster section contains a poem of tributes and a poem of stipends, neither of which makes any allusion to such a policy. These poems were therefore the original Munster section, and were of older date than the poems written in Brian's interest. Indeed, one of the latter is a new edition of the poem of tributes. Cutting out the two poems of policy and another poem reciting the strongholds of the king of Cashel, the Munster section becomes exactly analogous to the sections for the remaining overkingdoms; and this was obviously the original form of the book. The poem of the strongholds may have been part of the original book, which, being compiled in Cashel, may well have devoted more attention to the king of Cashel than to the other overkings; or, what is more likely, it may also have been added through policy, claiming not only overlordship, but the control of fortresses in every part of Munster-a claim for which there was no precedent elserwhere in Ireland, and which seems to bear the mark of the strong hand of Brian.

[^2]Thus it is seen that there was a Book of Rights older than Brian's policy, and in which the poems in favour of that policy are evidently interpolated. What was the date of the older Book of Rights ? Here, again, there is little room for doubt. One of Brian's poems professes to be dictated to Selbach, the poet of Cormac. This allusion, like the fabricated history of the Dublin Norsemen, is due to the daring invention of Brian's poet. It proves that he beliered the original Book of Rights, or the original Munster section thereof, to have been written by Selbach. As less than a century separated the two writers, and as moreover the later writer had the evidence of the Psalter of Cashel before him, we may take it as proved that the original Book of Rights dated from the time of Cormac, and therefore that the tradition which ascribes the Psalter of Cashel, containing the original work, to Cormac is quite accurate-at least, as concerns the date of compilation.

Cormac fell in the Battle of Belach Mughna in 90x. The Psalter of Cashel may be dated somewhere about 900 . From it the tale Macynimartha Find, it is claimed, was transcribed. The language of the piece, if I am not mistaken, in point of its antiquity, justifies the claim. At all events, the tale is the oldest piece of prose, and the oldest extensive piece in any form that me possess of the Fenian story.

The most remarkable trait of the Mucgnimurth" is that, like the whole Ulidian epic, it deals with an Ireland in which the dominant "Milesian" race of history does not exist. We cannot suppose this trait to have been accidental. In the later developments of the legend, the Milesian dynasties of Tara and Cashel are prominent in the action. In this tale, they are not even the sulbject of the remotest allusion. And yet there is abundant opportunity for introducing them. We find Fionn going northwards to Slane on the Boyne. He must hare passed near Tara. Slane itself was in the home territory of the high-king, the magnificent Conn of the Hundred Battles. Mere dramatic instinct, one imagines, would have compelled some mention of so distinguished a neighbour; but there is no such mention. Fionn journeys southwards from Slieve Blonm. He must have traversed the particular domain of the king of Cashel, yet there is no word of Mugh Nuadhat or his famous son and successor Ailill Olom.

The negative evidence is still more complete. The story of Fionn begins with the Battle of Cnucha, in which his father Cumball is slain. In later versions, ${ }^{1}$ the chief enemy of Cumhall, the antagonist at whose instance this battle is fought, is the monarch Conn. In the Macgnimartha, there is no mention of Comn or of his party in connexion with the battle, and no room left for them. The battle is fought between Cumball's people on the one side, and the Luagni of Tara and the Clanna Morna on the other. The subject of dispute is in no way connected with monarchical policy. It is a contention for the fianship (fiamus, ficmaidecht) of Ireland, between chieftains fighting for their own hand.

The same thoroughly negatire evidence is borne by the incident in which the boy Fionn, like the boy Cú Chulainn, ranquishes singlehanded a whole team of lads at the game of iomain or " hurley." In the later versions, this incident takes place in the presence of the monarch Conn at the great national games of Tailtiu. In the Macgnimartha, it takes place on the green of "a certain fort" in Leinster, neither Conn nor any other king being present. In short the Macgnimartha, like the Ulidian epic, supposes a period when the Milesian sovereignty of Tara and of Ireland was still unknown, when the Boyne was the boundary between the Ulidians and the Leinstermen. This tradition demands for the Fenian story an antiquity dating at all events farther back than the legend of the pagan high-kings. I have shown elsewhere that the Milesian regime in Tara has for its anterior limit the so-called "restoration" under Tuathal Techtmar, and that the high-kingship cannot reasonably be supposed to have existed before Niall of the Nine Hostages. The modernity of this dynasty was well known to the author of the Macgnimartha, as it was to the authors of the Ulidian sagas; and to have introduced the Milesian line or the hegemony of Tara into either story would have seemed to these writers almost as much out of place as the introduction of the Lord Lieutenant would have seemed to Micheál Coimín.

[^3]The positive evidence of the Macgnimartha is no less striking. The chief contending parties in the story are the Luagni, the Clanna Morna, and the people of Cumhall. The Luagni have often been confounded by modern annotators with the Luigne of Meath. They were distinct races. Luigne means the descendants of Lugh, the Celtic god. Luagni means the descendants of Lóch. The Luigne and the Luagni both existed in Meath in historic time. The Luigne occupied a definite small territory near Navan. The Luagni were a vassal race (aithechtuatb) scattered over the region of Meath (including Westmeath) from the Shannon to the sea. They were, in fact, the servile remnant of an ancient Leinster race. Even in the period presumed by the Ulidian epic, the Luagni were a subject people. Their king was Coirbre Nia Fer, king of Tara ; but he was not of their race, being of the Lagin or dominant race of Leinster. The Luagni were his vassals. In the story of the Battle of Rosnaree, Conchobar taunts his Ulstermen with being inferior in valour to these vassals. The Ulstermen were getting worsted. "Truly, Ulstermen," said the king, "I was not aware till to-day that the Galians of Leinster or the Luagni of Tara were braver than ye." As to the status of the Galians, here linked with the Luagni, there is no doubt. Like the Luagni, they were subjects of a Lagenian king, Find, king of Ailiu, brother of Coirbre Nia Fer ; but he was not of their race. They were vassals. Hense, when they join Medb in the expedition of the Táin Bó Cualnge, she first proposes to destroy them, fearing their power, but afterwards breaks them up into small bands, and distributes them among the other forces. This she could not have done if they had been led by their own king. In fact, they had no king or chieftain on the occasion, being merely the vassal levies of her ally, the king of Ailiu. Like the Luagni, the Galians still existed in historical time as vassal tribes, aithechtuatha, being distributed over the northern parts of Leinster east of Ossory. The distribution of the Luagni and Galeoin is given in the tract on the aithechtuatha in the "Book of Ballymote."

Regarding the Clanna Morna, there is but one tradition, that they belonged to the Fir Bolg of eastern Connacht, who were also a vassal people.

We now come to the third section of these early fiana, the race to which Cumball and Fionn belonged. The Macgnimartha tells us that Cumhall was a member of the sept Ui Tarsig, a branch of a people called the Corco Oche of Cúil Chontuinn. The annotator of the Ossianic Society's text, whose authority was probably O'Donovan, places this people in the north of Meath. I have not found this location confirmed by any other eridence; nor have I found any tradition connecting Fionn with northern Meath. On the other hand, Mac Firbis, in his tract on the Fir Bolg (Genealogies, R.I.A. copy), and Keating, in his History (chap. ix), agree in saying that the Cí Tarsig were located in Cí Fáilge (Offaly, Co. Kildare), and also that they belonged to the race of the Fir Bolg. Fir Bolg here is a general name for the early races reduced to vassaldom, and includes the Fir Domnann and the Galeoin. But what is more definite, Nac Firbis (p. 55) quotes an older writer to the effect that the Ui'Tarsig were a sept of the Galeoin, and that Fionn, chief of the Fenians, was of that race. Again, the tract on the Aithechtuatha, or vassal peoples, in the "Book of Ballymote" states that one of the three later divisions of the Galeóin, the Tuath Fochmuinn, was located in Uí Failgi, in Fotharta Airbrech, and upon Atmu and all that are proper to Almu of septs (anas dir di [d]i finib). Almu, according to all tradition, was the chief seat of Fionn. It is shown as the Hill of Allen on modern maps, about a mile east of the borders of the modern barony of West Offaly. It seems certain, then, that Cumball and Fionn were leaders and heroes of the Galeoin, and that these two races, the Galeoin and the Luagni, linked together in the story of Rosnaree, were the chief antagonist parties in the original version of the Battle of Cnucha, with the Clanna Morna of Connacht as interlopers on the side of the Luagni. It is perhaps no mere coincidence that the king over the Galeoin, though not of them, in the Ulster epic, is also named Fionn.

There need be no hesitation, therefore, in drawing the conclusion that the Fenian epic originated among the Galeoin who dwelt in the neighbourhood of Almu. What chiefly distinguishes it from, I think, almost every other primitive epic is that it is the hero-lore of a subject, not of a ruling, race. In riew of the origin here traced for it, this peculiar character is quite natural. For centuries before the Irish Christian period, the Galeoin were a subject race, compelled to do battle for their rulers. There are, of course, in the Fenian story certain features common to early epopee, such as the conflicts of the heroes with fierce monsters, their close relationship to the gods, &c. But the distinctive features of the Fenian legend, and, I think, the fortunes of the legend itself, are traceable to its origin among a vassal race and its early shaping at their hands.

The status of subject races receives little light from the Ulster epic, which is our chief source of pre-Milesian tradition. The rise of the Milesian power, and the fuller history connected therewith, bring into the clearest contrast the comparative rights and powers of the dominant and subordinate races. The Book of Rights shows the chief Milesian dynasties exacting heavy annual tributes from the subject peoples, but holding their own minor branch dynasties exempt from all tribute. Going farther back, we find Dúi Tenguma, king of Connacht at the close of the fifth century, expatriating a whole petty kingdom of Fir Bolg race, and planting in its stead the Milesian colony of Ui Maine. The power which could thus exterminate a race, could also subject it to unlimited exactions. Among the things it could exact were armed levies. The freemen of the dominant race could not be compelled to serve in the field for more than a few weeks every year. "If the hosting of Connacht should remain [in the field] longer than a fortnight and a month, the Ui Maine have liberty to return home" (Hy Many, p. 67). "These septs are freed from the hostings of spring and summer, and there is no power to ask them against their will" (ib.). Such exemptions of the dominant race by name imply that there were other races not so exempt. The subject races, therefore, were liable to longer military service than six weeks; and their levies could be called out even during seed-time and harvest. The subject peoples might thus be required to furnish forces at any time, even when the free population was engaged on the most urgent works of agriculture. This demand could only be met by the creation among them of a warrior caste, living by the chase and by the plunder of their enemies in war. Bands of such professional soldiery were called fianc. The professional soldier wat called feinnid, feindid. We can thus understand how, as the Furk of Rights makes clear, the powerful kings of Tara and Cashel hipt the territories around those strongholds in the occupation of sulject states, instead of colonizing them with branches of their own race. By this means they held at their disposal, at all seasons and for indefinite periods, the forces of the subject peoples almost in the condition of a standing army.

That funa meant levies of inferior political status is, I think, apparent in the verse from a poem on the death of Brian Caṭa an Dúin (A.D. 1260)-do ghoin a bfian ar mbranán-which has reference to the game of brandub, resembling chess, and is translatel by O'Donovan "their prauns (fian) have checkmated our king." Here fiun denotes the pieces of inferior status in the game. The epithet $r i$ for fianaib, which occurs several times in (illa Coemáin's poem on the high-kings, is seen to have a special significance. It means an orer-kiny, for such alone had power to call out the fiana of the subject states. The fiuna were not mercenary troops. A mercenary was called amus; mercenary service, amsaine.

We do not bear of contemporary fiena in the Annals. They probably belonged to no later period than the completion of the Milesian conquests, which virtually came about in the fifth century, before our contemporary political records begin. By that time the subject states had probably attained the fixity of conditions indicated in the Book of Rights. When the stress of conquest had passed away, the existence of professional armed bands on an extensive scale must have been felt to be a burden and a danger. The fiuna, therefore, are prehistoric ; but that such a class could have been invented for literary purposes is inconceivable. Their existence is a fact preserved by a genuine and vivid, if somewhat idealised, tradition.

How and by whom was the literary tradition of the funu maintained? We can answer with certainty that it was not maintained by the literati of the dominant race. The great list of 187 tales in the Book of Leinster sontains only four or five titles that can be taken to refer to the Fenian cycle. The almost complete absence of pieces in Old Irish, or bearing linguistic evidence of an earlier than Middle-Irish casting, confirms the testimony of the list. The Fenian literature, as a body, came into the great literary schools no earlier than the Middle-Trish period.

Does not this prove too much? If hardly any traces of Old Irish are found in the earlier Fenian literature, must we not conclude that the Fenian story itself is a Middle-Irish development? I do not think so. We have to consider the different circumstances in which the dominant Milesians, ${ }^{1}$ or Scots, adopted the two heroic cycles. This race appears to have had no body of ancient hero-lore peculiar to themselves. The romance of their past grew up around a skeleton of artificial history, pieced together by the schools. Upon this structure were overlaid various patches of the traditions of the older races.

It was apparently during the seventh century that the Milesian poets adopted the Ulidian hero-lore. ${ }^{2}$ We find them about the same period adopting the Ulidian scheme of history. Dr. MacCarthy (Torld Lectures, vol. iii) finds the oldest traceable effort to devise a bistory of pre-Christian Ireland in one of the "Synchronisms" preserved in the Book of Ballymote. Applying chronographical tests, he says that this document "may date from the end of the sixth century." The only detailed piece of Irish " history" in the document is a list of the Ulidian kings from the foundation of Emain to the period of the Ulidian epic. In it, and not in Tigernach, occurs originally the statement that nothing of Irish history is known or credible prior to the foundation of the Ulidian capital. Clearly this earliest history is of Ulidian origin, and is copied into a document embodying in a crude form the Milesian theory of ancient Ireland. It would appear from all this that the Ulidian remnant was the first section of the Irish to cultivate a written literature dealing with matters Irish and secular. For this purpose they were specially advantaged. They had a rich herolore, a proud tradition, and their country was the scene of [^4]St. Patrick's earliest and most thorongh labours, which brought the new stimulus of Christian and Roman literary culture, of thorough familiarity with the arts of writing and reading. Between their conversion to Christianity and the seventh century, the Ulidians appear to have secured for themselves a literary primacy, amounting nearly to a monopoly of Irish secular literature.

Hence the Milesian writers, when they adopted the Ulidian hero-lore, adopted it as a classic, with all the extreme reverence shown by people new to any form of culture towards those from whom that culture is received, and by whom it has been developed. The Ulidian sagas, having once passed into the hands of the dominant race, became rigidly crystallized, and ceased to evolve. Most of the changes they afterwards suffiered were due, not to invention, but to the limitations of the scribes.

The early history of the Fenian hero-lore was quite different. This cycle remained in the possession of the subject races apparently until about the tenth century. As the Milesians, though masters of nearly all Ireland, never colonized more than about one-third of the country, the remaining two-thirds continuing in the occupation of the older races and under the rule of their native kings, it is evident that this epic of a subject race had an extensive public to whose sympathies it could present a strong appeal. Thus it must have spread from North Leinster, where it first took shape, through a large part of Ireland, ultimately reaching the furthest bounds of Gaelic speech. The period I postulate for this extension is the early centuries of Milesian domination, mainly between the years 400 and 700 . During this time the Fenian tradition must have been purely oral, and therefore susceptible of local development to any extent. It seems to have taken a particularly strong grip of the Ivernian population of West Munster, the region around Loch Léin becoming a second home, not only for the cultivation of the epic, but for the life and actions of the heroes. The story of Diarmaid must have been developed among the Corcu Duibne, whose territory embraced the modern baronies of Corcaguiny and Iveragh, and extended eastward to Loch Léin.

In the published portions of the cycle previous to this present volume, the part of Goll and his kindred has not been relatively prominent. But one has only to go upon the track of Fenian folklore among the Connacht peasantry of to-day, to find that in that region Goll is the foremost hero of nearly every tale. The race of Goll, the Clanna Morna, as already stated, were believed to have been a sept of the Connacht Fir Bolg. ${ }^{1}$ Naturally this branch of the Fiana was not made much of either in North Leinster or West Munster. These regions adopted Fiomn as their chief hero; and the Clanna Morna were his hereditary foes. It was the descendants of the Fir Bolg, who then and since then were numerous in the western province, that magnified the part of Goll. In Donegal, as in Connacht, Goll is the chief popular hero of the Fiana, the paragon of valour. Donegal also was Fir Bolg territory until its conquest by the sons of Niall, and after conquest was largely peopled by vassals of the Fir Bolg race. The Duanaire shows that the western and northwestern sub-cycle of Goll and his kindred found full expression at an early date in written literature. As in the western folk-tales, so in a number of these poems, Goll is made superior to Fionn in valour and truth.

It may be asked why, if the Fenian cycle was thus spread over Ireland, and accessible to the Milesian writers at all points, it was not taken up by them in preference to the Ulidian cycle, which, until the seventh century, was confined to one remote district. The question has already been partly answered. The Ulidian cycle came armed with the great prestige of letters. But a still more potent reason must have operated. In the seventh century the Ulidians were a free race. There is no sufficient proof that, at this period, they accepted even the suzerainty of the Uí Néill. Their hero-lore invariably represents them as something more than free, holding their own against " the four great fifths of Ireland." In order to bring the scene of action within their own familiar bounds, the author of Táin Bó Cualnge had to adopt the dramatic device of casting on his heroes a spell of sickness, ${ }^{2}$ during which the otherwise

[^5]impossible is accomplished-the Clidian territory is overrun by enemies. A conquering and dominant aristocracy could appreciate such a story of freemen coming from freemen. On the other liand, the Fenian epic was in form and essence the story of a rassal race. We have seen that it was distinctive of freemen that they could not be kept in military service beyond a stated short period in each year, and could not be called ont during seed-time or harvest to go upon expeditions. To belong to a permanent military service was the part of vassaldom; and vassaldom therefore was the most prominent character of the Fenian story. The whole Fenian tradition must thus have been repugnant to the sympathies of the free Milesians. Again, the Fenian hero-lore was kept up and cultivated by the conquered races, whom, even in the tenth century, the conquerors still called doer-thuatha, unfree peoples, reserving the title of soer-chlanda, free races, for themselves. When we see the deep repugnance with which a modern few, identifying themselves with a bygone era of conquest, regard the native language and literature of the Irish people, we can understand how the Milesian conquerors, while the memory of conquest was still green, must hare looked upon a literary tradition, not only peculiar to the subject peoples, but itself redolent of their subject status.

The inclusion of a Fenian tale in the Psalter of Cashel (about A.D. 900) is the first evidence we have of the adoption of the crele by the ruling race; and the context of this tale proves that it came fresh and unchanged from non-Milesian hands. By this time a new school of Irish learning had come into being, presided over by the chief filidh of the Milesian courts. The main work of this school was to reconstruct the early history of Ireland, and the central theory of its Irish history was that Ireland had been subject to the Nilesian race for ages before the Clrristian era. The method of work was to make a study of the whole mass of popular mythological and heroic tradition, assigning to it a chronology which did not exist within it, and arranging all the events of tradition in a definite order of succession. It was for this reason that a knowledge of tales by the hundred became such an extraordinary feature of Irish secular learning. The note appended to the list of tales in the Book of Leinster is fairly decisive on the point. The fili, or man of letters, took rank according to the number of traditional stories at his command. But, says the note, " he is no fili who does not harmonize and synchronize all the stories." [O'Curry is responsible for this rendering of the technical verbs employed. Whether or not he has given their exact meaning, there can be no doubt that the refer to some sort of correlating process, and, as a matter of fact. the schools did endeavour to harmonize and synchronize the storits. and presented them as a continuous history with dates.]

The prejudices of conquest bad by this time grown feelole. Christianity, apart from its principle of universal brotherhood, had contributed in two ways to elevate the conquered. The territorial organization of the Church was based on the political order of the fifth century. It was contrary to the Church's interest that this order should be disturbed. Hence we find that, in the tenth century, the petty states were, in most cases, ruled by the same dynasties as in the fifth. Two-thirds of these dynasties were of the older races. They remained tributary to the conquerors, but otherwise were apparently equal in franchise. Five centuries of dynastic permanence were in themselves a patent of high nobility. In the second place, a great number of the famous churchmen and religious men of letters were, from the first, drawn from the subject peoples. This fact alone must have tended strongly to equalize the status of conquering and conquered.

Intermarriage with the older dynastic families must bave done much to abate racial prejudice. In course of time, the distinction between free and unfree necessarily lost its racial significance, for even an unpaid debt might suffice to disenfranchise the delitor, though of free race.

But the new theory of history made it absolutely necessary to associate the conquering people with the traditions of the conquered. It was from these traditions that the early history was manufactured. It was not possible to set up a Milesian dynasty in remote antiquity, and yet to hold it detached from all antiquity. Thus at first the Ulidians, though their own story tells nothing of it, and all the other ancient dynasties in turn, were woven into the kindred of Milesius of Spain. The whole Irish aristocracy was grafted on a single genealogical tree. Having transcribed all that I could find of the pre-Christian genealogies, having analysed them, and compared them name by name, pedigree by prichree, I state here the conclusion-it would be too long to state the argument leading to the conclusion-which, in my opinion, is established beyond a shadow of doubt. The authentic genealogies reach back in no instance beyond the year 300 A.d. All the material referring to any earlier date, and therefore the whole genealogical scheme uniting the earliew lines to the Milesian main stem, is the work of the synchronizing and harmonizing school.

It is rather remarkable that the oldest and chief authority which I have found cited for early composite genealogies is the Psalter of Cashel. This compilation, therefore, particularly belongs to the harmonizing school of history. Thus already in the tentll century, the new theory of racial unity, of a common descent for all the free Irish, had found acceptance in the Milesian courts. The establishment of this theory must have marked the final disappearance of race prejudices. The only races excluded from the genealogical unity were the Galeóin, the Fir Domnann, and the Fir Bolg, for these races had sunk into complete vassaldom, and their dynastic lines had disappeared. If any petty kingdoms of these races had survived, they would almost certainly have been included in the Milesian comity.

It is, therefore, not merely a coincidence that, in the Psalter of Cashel, the hero-lore of the subject peoples makes its earliest appearance known to us in the hands of the dominant race. The time had arrived when the racial and political import of the Fenian sagas could be ignored, and their wider appeal could be accepted without prejudice. Nevertheless, even in the further developments of the cycle, there is a clear note of sometimes covert, sometimes unconcealed, hostility to the masters of Ireland.

It only remains to point out the traces of the later manipulation of the story from the specially Milesian standpoint. We have already seen that there is the Battle of Cnucha without Conn and the Battle of Cnucha with Comn ; the hurling match on the green of a certain fort and the same hurling match in the presence of Conn at Tailtiu. On the other hand, we find events peculiar to the Milesian story ; and in one version the Fiana are absent from mention, in another rersion they take a leading part. The Battle of Mucrama is one of these. The death of Coirbre Lifechar is another. It is usually told that Coirbre fell by the hand of Oscar, and Oscar by the hand of Coirbre, in the Battle of Gabair. I once imagined that this event was almost certainly historical, as the tradition of the death of a ligh-king and the manner of his death about A.D. 300 was likely to have been faithfully preserved. My faith in traditions dating from A.D. 300 was shaken by the discovery that the three joint kings who succeeded him, the Fothads, were a triad of divinities whose father was Lugh Lámfada; it was further shaken on learning that Coirbre, according to another story, was slain by a Munster prince. Wherever we find the Milesian kings of Meath or Cashel in the Fenian tales, or the Fiana in tales of the Milesian rulers, we find a story shaped or revised in the tenth century or later.

Unlike the Ulidian epic, the Fenian cycle thus became the property of the whole nation without any burden of learned prestige. Its credentials were solely popular. Its general character and scheme were, indeed, too firmly fixed in the popular mind to admit of change. Otherwise it was open to every kind of development, as the taste of the author and the public might dictate. Even a writer schooled in the Ulidian tradition might endeavour to archaize the story. One at least of the poems edited by Windisch is, I feel sure, a tour de force produced in this way. ${ }^{1}$ But in general the Fenian tales and poems were composed in the current language of prose and poetry, requiring no gloss. This fact, combined with the circumstances of their earlier history, enabled the Fenian sagas to oust completely from popularity the far grander and more impressive epic of the race of Rudraige.

The history of the Fenian epic, as I have essayed to reconstruct it, offers an easy solution of several problems. It explains the form of the heroic narrative, and the peculiar rôle of the heroes. It explains the long-deferred appearance of the epic in written literature, and its forward state of development when at length it does appear. It explains also the almost exclusive popularity of the epic-its position for many centuries as the chief hero-lore of the Gaelic-speaking races of Ireland and Scotland.

The legend of the Fiana, as it spread from race to race, from the Galeoin to the Erneans and the Fir Bolg, from these to the ascendant Scottic aristocracy, was constantly undergoing reformation, and at no time acquired, like the Ulidian story, a classic and final form. It remained always modern, not only in its language, but in the sense of being entirely the property of each succeeding generation of story-tellers and ballad-makers. In this way, it retained the power of constantly and freely assimilating new elements. A bold device-the addition of more than a century to the lives of two of the heroes- enabled the epic to secure for itsel f the most commanding figure in Irish history, St. Patrick, and io develop a humorous side in the contrast between pagan and Christian ideals. The hitherto published examples of this development belong to the modern period; but a number of much earlier specimens will be found in this volume. It is somerhat amusing to find some present-day writers themselves so deficient in humour as to imagine that, in the debates between Patrick and Oisin, the laugh is turned against Christianity. In the older examples, as is usual in the older literature, the humorous aspect is never stripped to the skin.

The survival of Oisín and Caoilte until St. Patrick's mission probably did not originate in the conscious purpose of introducing the Christian element. Its motive was similar to that which endowed Findtan and Tuan with a still more marvellous longevity. The early native writers were well aware that the art of writing, to whatever extent it may lave been practised in pre-Christian Ireland, was not commonly applied to general literary purposes before the time of the Christian scribes. St. Patrick himself taught the alphabet. Oisín and Caoilte lived on, so that they might meet those who were able to urite the story of the Fiana. Thus we find that two of the poems in the Duanaire commence with the injunction addressed to a Christian seribe, "Set this down, O Brogan, in writing."

The same power of assimilation enabled the story to attach to itself the legends of the mighty ancestor-kings of the Milesian race, Conn and his successors in Tara, Cathair Mór in Ailiu, and Ailill Olom in Cashel. So thoroughly popular, too, was the development of the epic that it found no difficulty in admitting the Norsemen into the narrative-a glaring anachronism which must always have been patent to the learned. The history of Alexander the Great compelled the admirers of the Fiana to make them also the conquerors of distant Oriental regions. Thus arose the echtra or oversea expedition, of which the Duanaire contains two elaborate specimens-the least interesting of all its contents, their virtue seemingly comprised in exciting popular wonder about distant and unknown lands. (At present the term eachtra seems to denote any prose tale of a heroic nature or connected with heroic legend, a tale in verse being called laoidh.)

The Norman invaders were too modern and familiar to find a place in the action of the epic, which nevertheless has ingeniously contrived to work them in by way of prophecy. Two of the poems in the Duanaire are devoted to prophetic accounts of the Normans in Ireland.

To sum up, the story of Fionn appears to have arisen, like most primitive hero-lore, in the region of mythology. It obtained a peculiar development among the ancient vassal race of North Leinster, the Galeoin, who impressed on the life of the heroes the character of professional warriorship, permanent military service being a special obligation of unfree races only. Ignored by the dominant peoples, the story in this form spread widely among the subject states, and received various local developments. By the ninth century, it had begun to be written down. The old ideas of racial inequality had then lost most of their force; the status of permanent military service had long ceased to be prevalent; and so the stories of the Fiana came gradually to be accepted even by the dominant race on their merits as literature. Unfettered by prestige, the sagas were susceptible of unlimited development, and were free to adapt themselves to popular taste. In time they ousted all their rivals.

4. The Character of the Fenian Epic.

Primitive epopee appears to be the product of a kind of rationalizing or humanizing process. The oldest forms of folklore were doubtless the nature-myth and the aneciote. In the myth, the mysterious forces of nature are deified, and the phenomena they produce appear as the wars and quarrels, the loves and procreations. the inearnations and metamorphoses of the gods. In course of time. as mythology develops, the original meaning of the events becomes obsemed, until at length the whole story becomes cloudy, mystical. and irrational.

side by side with such a mythological tradition, we must be conrinced that every fairly intelligent race possessed a body of purely human anecdotes, dealing with the traditional history of the race itself, and the deeds and sayings of its most memorable men and women. The primitive epic seems to be a sort of rationalizing and lumanizing conquest of the myth by the race-tradition. The herooriginally a mere warrior or prince of the race-assumes the rôle of the nature-god; and the superhuman material of mythology is subjected to a human form. The myth, howerer, is not wholly discarded; for the worship of the gods assures its preservation. Thus primitive hero-lore is always on the borderland of natural religion ; the heroes are of the kindred of the gods ; the gode share in their fortunes; but many of the deeds ascribed to the heroes are almost transparently duplicates of the deeds achieved by the deified forces of nature, life and death, light and darkness, summer and winter, fair weather and storm, sun, moon, and stars, earth, wind, water, fire.

Niss Eleanor Hull has given us a very interesting account of the mythological elements of the Ulidian epic. In investigating the early genealogies, I have seen enough to indicate that a much fuller connexion between the Ulidian story and the older mythology remains still to be traced. In the Fenian epic the mythological element is less prominent, chiefly because the Fenian epic, as we know it, is the product of a comparatively modern period when Christianity had largely destroyed the vitality of mythological tradition, reducing it from a living growth to the condition, as it were, of dry timber. ${ }^{1}$

Nevertheless, the Fenian epic retains clear traces of its mythological beginnings. These traces are most visible, if not exclusively

[^6]visible, in connexion with the principal hero, Fionn, proving apparently that this central figure, at all events, has persisted from the earliest phase of epic literature, and that the later and special features of the story are accretions due to the historical causes already indicated. Fionn is a demigod. On his father's side, he is a hero of the ancient Galians. His mother is the daughter and granddaughter of the gods. She was Muiremn, daughter of Tadhg son of Nuadhu. It is commonly related that this Tadhg and his father were druids. But in the Agallamı (see "Silva Gadelica," translation, p. 225), among the various rulers of the Tuatha Dé Danann is mentioned Tadhg son of Nuadhu out of the beautiful sidh of Almu. Tadhg, therefore, was one of the immortals who dwelt in underground mansions of great beauty; and more than that, Almu or Almhain, Fionn's own habitation, was itself one of those dwellings of the gods. Fiomn was great-grandson of the deity, Nuadhu, whose name has been found in several pagan Celtic inscriptions in Britain.

Like Hercules, Fionn was a mighty slayer of fierce and destructive monsters; and one of the poems in the Duanaire is mainly devoted to this part of his character or story. In modern times, this function of the hero and demigod has been transferred to St. Patrick.

Fionn, the great hunter, may also belong to the mythological period. Apollo was a god of the cliase. One of the synonyms by which Lugh, the favourite deity of the Celts, was known in ancient Ireland was Conmac, 'hound-lad,' or Mac Con, 'lad of hounds.' On the other hand, in its historical aspect, the Fenian epic embodies the tradition of a professional warrior-caste, to whom the chase, in a country abounding with wild animals, must have been a customary recreation. Thus the characteristic prominence of hunting in the epic is capable of a less remote explanation than the mythological one.

The enormous numbers of wild animals killed in the Fenian hunts might be taken by many as an instance of that weakness of Irish literature for exaggeration which is often and justly contrasted with the reserve and sense of proportion characteristic of Greek literature and of the modern literatures under Greek influence.

But in a country abounding with game, the battue might well exceed anything in contemporary experience. I find it related, in what purports to be a sober statement of fact, that in a single day's chase, held by Prince Esterhazy, there were killed 80 foxes, 100 wild boars, 160 deer, and 300 hares; and that in the course of a more prolonged hunting expedition by a king of Naples in Austria, the game taken included 5 bears, 13 wolves, 17 badgers, 354 foxes, 1,145 does, 1,625 roebucks, 1,820 boars, 1,950 deer, 11,121 rabbits, 12,335 partridges, 15,350 pheasants, and 16,354 hares.

For many other intimate relations between Fionn and the immortals, the reader may consult Agallamh na Seanorach. Though not itself ancient, this tract appears to contain much matter of great antiquity, such as the mythological traditions of Almu mentioned above. Many of the anecdotes are inconsistent with each other; and the whole seems to have been a rambling compilation of traditions of the Fiana from all sources. It has occasional quotations from poems to be found in the Duanaire.

Leaving to experts the further investigation of the Fenian epic as related to mythology, I now turn to the story as we find it. It seems to have first taken the shape of a distinct epic as the narrative of a blood-feud or private war, fich buncid, as it is called in the Macgnimartha-an hereditary vendetta. A similar foundation belongs to many of the Greek tragic tales. The duty of avenging a kinsman's blood, even though shed in open battle or for a just cause, was a prime element, one might say, of the religion of primitive races. Every homicide started a new and apparently interminable movement of fate. Even a compact of peace or the formal acceptance of the cric or compensation allorred by law was often of no avail to still the voice of blood. Thus the hero-tale that commences with a slaying, contains from the first all the elements of a dark impending tragedy. Such a tragedy is the story of the Fiana.

In the Macgnimartha the inexpiable feud arises out of the killing of Cumhall in battle by the Luagni and the House of Morna. Whence it was the destiny of Cumball's unborn son to follow the gane of vengeance to the end. We may, I think, assume that a simple version of the story was at one time current, in which Fionn avenged his father by slaying the chiefs of the Luagni and the Clanna Morna, and in turn perishing at the hands of their kindred. But in the later versions of the story, developed probably far away from the southern bounds of Meath, the Luagni, an obscure rassal race in historic times, are no longer thought worthy of prominence ; and their place is taken by the Milesian kings of Tara. Conn of the Hundred Battles becomes the chief enemy of Cumhall. Goll mac Morna held the post of commander of the fians or professional fighting bands under the high-king Conn. The command is taken away from Goll by Conn, and given to Cumball of the Galian race, who banishes Goll from Ireland. This Goll episode is absent from the Macgnimartha, and, no doubt, originated in Connacht.

Later on, Conn quarrelled with Cumhall, and deprived him of the command, recalled Goll to Tara, and with his aid made war on Cumball and the Leinster fians. The issue was tried in the battle of Cnucha, supposed to be Castleknock, near Dublin. Cumhall was slain by the hands of Goll and his brothers. Thus the blood-feud began, the parties to it being on the one side the kindred of Cumball, the House of Baoisgne, and on the other side the House of Morna and the high-kings, viz., Conn, his son Art, Cormac son of Art, and Cairbre son of Cormac.

Fionn, a new-born infant, was carried off into hiding from his father's enemies. His youthful exploits are related in the Macgnimartha. When he came to man's estate, a reconciliation came about between him and Conn. This feature of temporary pacification serves to heighten the tragedy, and is found not only in the main story, but in several episodes. Thus, Fionn becomes temporarily reconciled also to Goll, to Diarmaid, and in the very striking first poem of the Duanaire to the hero Aedh Rinn. The reconciliation in the main story also serves to provide a period of peace in which tales may be told of the great hunting exploits of the Fiana, the destruction of monsters, the holding of feasts, the defence of Ireland against foreign invaders, many supernatural encounters and adventures, expeditions over-sea, and a rich and unlimited variety of other episodes, which could not take place in the midst of an implacable vendetta. Of all the episodes, the most striking and elaborate is the well-known story of Diarmaid, exidently of West Munster origin.

Then comes the inevitable rupture of the peace. No writer attempted to compile the whole Fenian story in one consecutive narrative. It was always dealt with piecemeal, and the sequence of events thus escapes being indicated. But it is almost necessary to suppose that the rupture between Fionn and Goll took place while Fionn was still on fairly peaceful terms with the other section of his enemies, the kings of Tara. The story of the final war between Fionn and Goll was no doubt chiefly elaborated in Connacht. Several of the poems in the Duanaire deal with it; and in them, while Fionn is always the more powerful, Goll is the greater and the nobler hero. The end of it was that Goll was cut off from escape on a rocky promontory, reduced to the last extremities by hunger and thirst, and at length slain.

Thus the issue is left between Fionn and the royal house. The making of this portion of the story appears to have been done mainly in southern Ireland. Even while the peace remains, Fionn is usually exalted in numerous suggestions above the high-king Cormac. During the Christian period the dominant dynasties of Meath, Connacht, and Ulster all regarded themselves as descended from Cormac, who is depicted as the most majestic of all kings of Ireland, and is himself the foremost hero of a considerable cycle of tales. Throughout the same period, the line of high-kings claiming Cormac as their ancestor was incessantly engaged in efforts to maintain its suzerain claims over southern Ireland; and its efforts were incessantly and vigorously resisted. Hence we may safely infer that the glorification of Fionn above Cormac, a Leinster warrior chief above the forefather of the chief dynasties of "Conn's Half," was not likely work for northern poets, and was a congenial task for the poets of the south. Fiom is represented sometimes at peace with Cormac, sometimes at war with him and victorious over him. When Cairbre son of Cormac becomes king, it is war to the end. In the Battle of Gabhair, Cairbre and Osear, grandsons of Fiomn, fall by each other's hands; but the Fiana are hopelessly uverthrown. The remnant of the House of Morna take vengeance for Goll by assisting the king to crush the Fiana of Fionn. Fionn himself is slain in a separate engagement, his slayers being three sons and a grandson of Uirgrenn. Uirgrenn was chief of the Luagni, and took part in the killing of Cumhall which caused the feud. He was afterwards slain by Fionn in vengeance. The tragic story of the Fiana thus ends as it begins among the ancient races of northern Leinster.

The characters of the principal heroes of the epic are for the most part of a single type, embodying three fixed traits-courage, generosity, and courtesy. Such are Oisín, Oscar, Diarmaid, Mac Lugach, Faelán, and many others. Goll varies a little from the type, in that his frequent plight of adversity enables the poet or narrator to endow him with a peculiar fortitude and endurance. Caoilte also diverges a little from this common mould. He is usually represented as pre-eminently a gentle-hearted and loveworthy hero. A few of the heroes have their individual traits more strongly and consistently worked out.

The character of Fionn appears nearly always to have been clearly recognized by the narrators. It is a peculiar character. Officially-if one may so speak-he is posed as the embodiment of greatness : he is valorous, of boundless generosity, of high courtesy. But the burden of vengeance and of fate casts a dark shadow on the more intimate folds of his mind and heart. He is cautious, subtle, and deliberate, darkly vindictive, never wholly placable, sometimes well-nigh treacherous. One might almost imagine him to be a prophetic symbol of the modern great state, magnificent in its undertakings, lavish in hospitality and in giving and spending, dignified in every peaceful relation, commanding constant tributes of admiration; and yet behind all this-suspicion, craft, selfishness, great depths of meanness, no true and full acceptance of the dictates of honour, compassion, and generosity, no weakness for the moral law in the exercise of sovereign opportunity. This hard and selfish character must have manifested itself to our forefathers in certain strong figures among the warlike kings of the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth centuries; of whom the annals. now and then relate the most ruthless and unconscionable deeds, and other deeds of fearless valour and noble generosity, ending all with an obit of superlative glorification.

Conin mac Morna is another clearly individualized personage. In the later developments, apparently of southern origin, Conán becomes a laughing-stock. There is nothing humorous in his earlier portrait. He has all the courage of the hero-type, but entirely lacks its courtesy and generosity. Hence he is called disturber of the Fian,' not the terms to describe a comic character. The early epic is a tragedy, not admitting laughter even into its peaceful interludes. The sole humorous element is late and external to the story-Oisin's difficulty in embracing Christian ideals of life. This feature already appears in the Duanaire, but is treated with great reserve. In later poems, it becomes a subject of free facetiousness.

Not least remarkable among the contents of the Duanaire is the group of short poems of three stanzas and uprards. They relate no incident of the epic, and describe no portion of its apparatus. The narrative and descriptive poems of greater length appeal to the ordinary audience that loves a traditional tale; and, as I have already said, there is proof that these poems reached the people, and became incorporated in their folklore. The shorter poems make no such appeal, nor are they of the character of the metrical insets that are so often found in the Middle-Irish prose tales. They are therefore independent compositions, presenting to us a thought or group of thoughts which the narrative created in the mind of the poet. They seem as spontaneous and irresponsible as the song of a bird when the rain-clouds have gone by ; there is no attempt to give them an outer framework. The passing notion is committed to its wording, and no more said. They are something like sonnets, but free from the heavy pretentiousness of the claim that the sonnet always makes, and does not always make good. It is fortunate that we have them; for they reveal to us a great deal of the mind and poetic ideal of the makers of the Fenian poetry. They show that these were writers, students of their art, and not merely versifiers of tales for popular consumption ; that they were poets who could compose to please their own taste, for the little pieces aim at no public reward. In no case is the name of the poet attached to them. His recompense is neither fee nor fame. Yet, though writers and students of their art, these poets belong not to the closet, but to the open air. The beautiful sleep-song of Grainne to Diarmaid begins as tenderly as though it were sung in a luxurious mansion, but quickly reminds us of wooded glens and heathery mountain slopes. In truth, nearly all our ancient literature was written within twelve paces of nature's own domain, wherein the writer was a constant dweller, not a visitor. So, too, when these poems tell us of the deeds of men, the poet is intimate with the whole reality that is the basis of what he describes-perhaps, indeed, was a sharer in the battle or the chase. Cormacán the Poet wrote the noted historical poem on the Circuit of Ireland by Muirchertach of the Leathern Cloaks in 941. Cormacán himself put on his leathern cloak, and stepped forth from Ailech with the thousand veterans, entered with them the royal fortresses, heard his master dictate submission, saw the golden fetters placed on the limbs of princes, slept out in the snow, listened to the music he describes, of the hailstones at night rattling on the leathern mantles, marched over the mountains and the plains, forded the rivers, faced the hostile provincials, carried his life in his hand from Ailech to Ulidia, from Ulidia to Leinster, from Leinster to Cashel, and thence through Thomond and Connacht, and back again to the ramparts of Ailech. So when we read these ancient poems of battle and feast and chase, we know that much of their content has at least a true and close relation to the experiences of living men, and is not filtered down through a long succession of theatrical conventionalities from book to book, as is so much of the imaginative literature of modern times.

All the poems in this instalment of the Duanaire are written in the ancient syllabic non-accented metres. Various metres are employed, most of them arranged in quatrains of four verses, with seven syllables to the verse. The quatrains are printed as distichs, two verses to the line, which is the arrangement of the as. and of nearly all ancient mss. The reader of modern Irish should bear in mind, in reading Old or Middle Irish poetry, that the modern accentuation of one syllable in each word must be carefully avoided if it is desired to appreciate the metrical value and rhythm of the poems. All syllables, in whatsoever position, and however lightly accented in modern pronunciation, must be regarded as equally accented in the olden poetry. Thus in the first stanza of the Duanaire, Finn and 乙álfinn should be read so as to rhyme fully. The second syllable in टalfinn should be accented as strongly as the first, not lightly passed over, as in the modern pronunciation. The same applies to all syllables in every verse, no less than to the rhyming syllables. Again, there are no slurred consonants making one syllable of two, as at present pronounced. The word uball has to be read u-ball, not úll. Except the mute f., every consonant requires its natural sound as if at the beginning of a word.

The Race and Home of Fionn.
The genealogical accounts of Fionn are widely various, and form a striking example of the freedom taken by the genealogists in their dealings with the prehistoric period. In his great "Book of Genealogies" (R. I. A. copy, p. 435), Dubhaltach Mac Fir Bhisigh quotes six different pedigrees for Fionn, the sole point of agreement in the six being that Fionn's father was Cumhall.

Two of the pedigrees trace his descent to Nuadu Necht, thus:

1. Nuadu Necht.
2. Baoisgne.
3. Subhalt.
4. Trenmor.
5. Cumhall.
6. Fionn.
7. Nuadu Necht.
8. Fergus Fairrge.
9. Soalt.
10. Alt.
11. Cairbre Garbhron.
12. Baoisgne.
13. Mudh (Mugh).
14. Buan.
15. Fergus.
16. Trendorn.
17. Trenmor.
18. Cumhall.
19. Fionn.

Nuadu Necht is the god Nuadu, regarded as ancestor of the royal line of Leinster, Dal Niadh Corb. He figures in the list of prehistoric high-kings of all Ireland. In these pedigrees, therefore, the genealogists claim Fionn as a Leinsterman, and ennoble him by attaching him to the ruling race.

A third pedigree runs as follows :-

1. Sen.
2. Deadhadh (Dedu).
3. Daire.
4. Forgoll.
5. Goll.
6. Fer da roth.
7. Baoisgne.
8. Cumball.
9. Fionn.

Dedu son of Sen is a mythological ancestor of all the branches of the Ivernian or Ernean race. The Erainn of Munster are called Clanna Dedad, descendants of Dedu, in the Ulidian sagas. This pedigree deals with Fionn as an adopted hero of the Erainn, the ancient Iverni.

Two other pedigrees claim him for other Munster races. "Fionn son of Cumball, son of Baoisgne of the Orbhraighe of Druim Imnocht." "Fionn son of Cumhall, son of Baoisgne, son of Oiche, of the Corca Oiche of the Fidhghenti." The Orbhraighe of Druim Imnocht are apparently a sept of the race whose name is retained by the barony of Orrery, County Cork. The Ui Fidhghente were their neighbours. The Orbhraighe were tributaries of Cashel ; the Ui Fidhghente, comprising the petty kingdoms of Ui Chairbre Aebhdha and Ui Chonaill Ghabhra, both within the present County of Limerick, were free States of Munster, claiming common descent with the dynasty of Cashel. These two pedigrees further exemplify the cultivation of the Fenian epic transferred to Munster.

The sixth account of Fionn's descent given by Dubhaltachfifth in his order of statement-is endorsed by him, doubtless because alone it agreed with general tradition, " Others say-and it is true-that he was of the Ui Tairrsigh of Ui Failghi. The Ui Tairrsigh were a vassal-people. They were specifically of the Luaighni of Tara, and of the Fir Cul of Bregia; and this is one of the three houses from which the fian-kingship of Ireland was wont to be filled, for the king of the fians of Ireland was king of the Buaighni or of the Luaigni."

Dubhaltach had a good warrant for preferring this account. It was not only that intrinsically it appeared more genuine than the others ; for when we find conflicting pedigrees of a national hero, or even of a modern plutocrat, one giving him a plebeian, others a regal descent; one assigning him to a submerged race, the others attaching him to still extant dynastic families, we have little doubt as to which version is the more likely to have been meddled with. But that Fionn belonged to the sept Ui Tairrsigh happens also to be the oldest doctrine of his origin known to us. It is the doctrine of the oldest of the Fionn-sagas, the Macgnimartha.
"The Ui Tairrsigh of Ui Failghi" means that they were located in the territory of the Ui Failghi, one of the chief free dynastic races of Leinster, whose name is perpetuated in the modern baronies of East and West Offaly, County Kildare. The name Ui Failghi, descendants of Failghe, is traced by the genealogists to the prehistoric Ros Failghe, son of Cathair Mor, but is more probably derived from the noted Failge Berraide, a king of North Leinster in the early Christian period. It was in his time that the plain of Meath, west of Bregia, was wrested by the race of Niall from the Leinstermen (see "Annals of Ulster," A.D. 515). Fionn's home at Almha is on the border of the modern Offaly.

The Ui Tairrsigh are stated in the Mucmimartha to have been a sept of the Corcu Oiche of Cuil Chontuinn, which must have been somewhere in North Leinster. This partly explains why he is claimed for another Corcu Oiche located in Munster.

Dubhaltach is apparently in error where be says that the Ui Tairrsigh were a branch of the Luaighni of Tara. In the Macgnimartha, the Luaighni appear as rivals or enemies of Fionn's race. Moreover, on page 55 of his "Book of Genealogies," Dubhaltach quotes an older writer, who says of the Gaileoin

[^7]that they comprised the Tairrsigh, and " of these was Fionn the fian-chief." The Luaighni and the Gaileoin were distinct peoples.

Keating, in his "History of Ireland " (Irish Texts Society, vol. iv., p. 201), writing of the Fir Bolg, says: "Some antiquaries say that to them belong these three races which are in Ireland and not of the Gredhil, namely, the Gabhraighe of the Suca in Connacht, the Ui Tairsigh in the territory of Ui Failghe, and the Gaileoin of Leinster." Fir Bolg here, as usually in the histories, means all the ancient race-elements which, having lost their dynastic autonomy through conquest, were excluded from the genealogical roll of freedom. The passage indicates that the Ui Tairsigh still survived as a sept within the period of Irish MS. literature. It appears to suggest that the Ui Tairsigh were distinct from the Gaileoin ; but on closer examination it will be found that this view is not urgent. In the oldest historical period, gentilic names in ' Ui' are distinctive, not of a whole tribal or racial organization, but of a sept or subdivision. Thus, in the Trinity College ms., H. 3. 17, p. 761: "Hui Fidcuire 7 Hui Saine 7 Hui Cairpri 7 Hui Taisce 7 Hui Cail 7 Hui Naisi 7 Hui Mail hec sund (haec sunt) septem genera Gailinga." Hence the Ui Tairsigh in the writers cited by Keating may have been named only as the most noted sept of the Gaileoin.

The Book of Ballymote (p. 140) gives an account of the vassalpeoples of Ireland. In the account is embodied an abridged version of the story of the Hostel of Mac Dareo, telling how the vassals under Cairbre Cat-head overthrew the free races of Ireland. A fuller version of the story is given in the Book of Fermoy. In the latter version we read regarding Cairbre: "He was of the Luaighni, and was king over them, for from among these the headship of the vassals used to be taken." ${ }^{1}$

This statement supplies a remarkable parallel to the passage already cited from the Book of Genealogies. In both, a king who is not the ordinary territorial king of a free race, but the king of a scattered and landless people, is selected from among the [^8]Luaighni. In the one case, he is king of the vassal-peoples of Ireland ; in the other, he is king of the fiana of Ireland. But I have already shown that the status of fian-service was not compatible with the rights of freemen. The fiana and the vassals in the two passages are identical, or rather the fiana are the armed forces of the vassals, their forced levies fighting under the free kings.

The story of Mac Dareo's Hostel is followed in the Book of Ballymote by an account of the distribution of the vassal-peoples in the various free territories. The tract appears originally to have consisted of three sections: (a) a double list of the rassalpeoples, arranged according to aicmi or septs, and again according to tuatha or political groups; ${ }^{1}(b)$ the story of the vassal insurrection; (c) an account of the territorial distribution of the vassals. All three sections are given in the Book of Ballymote; but the story is cut down to what was regarded as historically essential. In the Book of Fermoy, the second section alone is given, the story being told at full length, and with many embellishments. In H. 3. 17 (p. 740), the first and third sections are given, the story being omitted. The third section alone is given in the Book of Genealogies, p. 50. We have thus three versions of that part of the tract that deals with the distribution of the vassals. The three versions come from a common source, but none of them is derived from the other. It is evident from their variations that each of them comes independently from a very ancient ms., perhaps through a number of intervening copies. It is also evident that the original ms. was partly illegible to its copiers. Thus the three versions assist in the restoration of the genuine text, which may have been that of the Book of Glendaloch, cited at the outset by the Book of Ballymote. It is to be hoped that this important text may soon be published. Meanwhile, I have felt it necessary to prefix so much to the following passages from it, dealing with the distribution of the Gaileoin and the Luaighni, the chief rival races in the oldest extant story of the Fiana.

"The following are the tuatha-states, politically composed groups-of which the Gaileoin in the Fifth or 'province' of Leinster north of Gabair consist: there are three divisions of them, namely, Tuath Fidga, 'forest tuath,' and Tuath Fochmainn, and Tuath Aithechda, 'vassal tuath.'
"Tuath Fochmainn are located in Offaly and in Fotharta Airbrech (in the north of King's County) and upon Almba and whatever septs are proper to Almha.
"Tuath Aithechda were in the east of the Liffey valley as far as the sea.
"Tuath Fidga in the Fortuatha of Leinster (in the Wicklow Mountains) and in Ui Cennselaigh (Co. Wexford largely) . . . . . .
"Tuath Luaighne were in Bregia (to the north and south of Tara), and in Laegaire and Ardgal (two petty kingdoms of Meath), and in the Delvins and in Moygoish (both in Westmeath), and up to Tara, and from the mouth of the Boyne to the confluence of Clonard."

[^10]In the territories occupied by the vassal-races of the Luaighne and the Gaileoin here indicated, we have the original theatre of the Fian-sagas, and the original home of the chief personages in the sagas, excepting the Clama Morna from across the Shannon. The intimate and close-woven connexion between the Fian-legends,the family of Fiomn, the status of the Fiana, the great house of Almha, the central blood-feud-between all these and the vassalraces of North Leinster and Meath-stands out as plain as day.

In the Colloquy with the Ancients (Silva Gadelica, vol. ii., p. 245) we read:-
" The king further questioned Caeilte: 'Whence was Finn mac Cumhall's origin?' and he replied: 'Of Leinster, being of the Ui Thairrsigh, that is from Glaise Bolcain ; or he was Finn son of Cumball, son of Tredhorn, son of Cairbre, called Garbhshron or 'rough-nose,' son of Fiacha Fobhreac or 'the slightly speckleci.' of the Ui Fhailge, a quibus 'Offaley.' 'Whence sprang his mother?' 'She was Muirne smooth-neck, daughter of Teigue son of Nuadha, of the Tuatha De Danamn.'"

Almha-great broad Almha of Leinster-was Fionn's inheritance through his mother, who inherited it from her grandfather Nuadha of the Tuatha De Danann, that is Nuadu the god. Almha will be found on modern maps, under the name of the Hill of Allen, in a central position in the county of Kildare. It is not a high hill, its summit being but 650 feet above sealevel. But it is a commanding hill, for there is no higher within many miles. It looks northward towards the plain of Meath, held by the Leinstermen until the sixth century ; eastward across Magh Life; southwards it sees the Curragh of Kildare, 'a sea to the horizon'; westward a wide expanse of the Bog of Allen, matrix of many rivers. Within a short day's march on the east lay Nás Laighean ' Naas of the Leinstermen,' the home of the Leinster kings. Equally near, on the edge of the Curragh, was Ailinn, their more ancient ssat. About as far to the west was the forest Fid Gaible, where the infant Fionn was hidden from his enemies. The Feeguile river in King's County preserves its name.

Lady Gregory, who paid a visit of exploration to the Hill of Allen a few years ago, told me no trace of ancient earthworks, or of ancient works of any kind, was visible on the hill. Almha, in fact, was not a stronghold like Tara, Emania, or Ailinn. It stands out in a land of bogs and moors, too poor to be immediately occupied by any ruler of importance. Its military value must have consisted in its being a watching-place from which the Leinster king in his stronghold of Ailinn might be warned of an enemy's approach from the hostile frontier north or west. No place was more likely to be chosen as a post to be constantly occupied by a watching party drawn from the vassal forces of the Gaileoin who lived in the surrounding country. But Almha had other associations. It was, as we have seen, the sidh wherein dwelt Tadhg son of Nuadhu of the Tuatha De Danann - that is, of the immortals. In the Colloquy (Silva Gad., p. 225) Tadhg is one of the list of divinities including Bodhbh Dearg, Aengus, Lir-all of immortal raceand Finnbheara, of Cnoc Meadha, who, as a king of the fairies, is still neither dead nor forgotten; and while Fionn is ruling in the house of Almba among mortals, his grandfather at the same time rules over immortals in the silh beneath. Thus Almha is seen to have been the natural meeting-place of the two traditions-one historical, telling of the foretime valour and achievements of the Gailian vassal-bands ; the other mythological and common to the Gaileoin and other kindred peoples. In this respect, the dwellingplace of Fionn resembles Fionn himself.

Much that is of importance in the way of notes and general comment would at present be premature, until the second half of Duanaire Finn is ready for publication. For the shortcomings of this first half, I can only say, with Niall Gruamdha, ailım ербсаие

EMENDATIONS, Etc.

In the printed text, I have endeavoured to reproduce the ars. as closely as the trpes would permit. The following emendations are confined to obvious or probable errors. Mere rariations of spelling are not dealt with, unless they appear misleading. As the poems differ probably in date, and all belong to a period of changes in spelling, I have set up no standard in making corrections. Metrical faults are noticed. Most of them are likely to he due to the scribes. The translation will often be found to have been necessarily based on emendations. Roman numerals denote the poems, arabic numerals the stanzas printed as distichs, this being the form of the ms.

This poem, in praise of Goll, appears to have been composed in rivalry with XXIII, in which Oscar is exalted. It belongs to the north-western sub-cyele of which Goll is the principal hero. The poet identifies Munster and Leinster with the enemies of Goll, and implies that but for Conn's repeated interference $\mathrm{G}(\mathrm{lll}$ would have held the headship of the Fiana. Fionn and the Fiana owe their safety to Goll, who revolts only when Fionn unnaturally kills his grandson Fedha, who was Goll's son. These features indicate the local development of the story. On the other hand, the tales in which Conan, brother of Goll, is held up to ridicule have a southern origin.

THE LAYS OF FIONX.

THE LAYS OF FIONN.

I.

The Abduction of Eargna.
I know the story of the Fian of Fionn before the time of the Tailgeann's coming, from the time of mighty Fergus to the time of lawgiving Oisin.
There were two comely men of the band, thou great Patrick son of Calpurn, Conan son of the Grey Man of Luachair, and Aodh Rinn right wrathful.
Conan, what Fenian was better in the land of Scotland or of Ireland? No warlike hero was more successful than Aodh Rinn son of Ronan.
It was Fionn that slew Aodh's father in a fray, and not with honour: Aodh Rinn and Fionn the seer were the children of two brothers.
Fionn gave to Aodh in his house each high requital that he demanded, to the son of fortunate Ronan as eiric for his worthy father.
Aodh who practised valour was not pleased with the requital he got for his father; whence the man did a grievous deed, out of which came his fierce tragedy.
Aodh Rinn had a daughter, loveliest in Ireland was she, for whom his insensate love was great: Eargna was the maiden's name.
He swore a vow in the hearing of all, Aodh Rinn son of Ronan, as he was wont, that no man should escape unscathed who might seek to be his son-in-law.
It was Aodh's fortune from his birth never to break his word: heroes in passion did not dare to come to demand his daughter.

Four years from that on, and a week full brief, a half-year and a single month, till the spouse of Conan died.
In (iabhair between two mountains, there the noble damsel dwelt, Liffe daughter of Ronan of Bregia, the river has preserved her name.
Conan was without a good wife, the noble man, the great lord; the daughter of Aodh Rinn was of all Ireland the one wife meet for him.
Fionn said within doors to the Grey Man's son from Luachair, " What doest thou, Conan, who hast practised valour, that thou askest not for the daughter of Aodh?'
' I will go forth to demand her, and do thou send thy bousehold with me' :-twelve times twenty that practised valour, was our strength as we went to demand her.
Twelve times twenty from great Almba, we fared forth, valiant of deed, to the fortress of Aodh from Ard Ruidhe, over the bank of the stream-clear Siuir.
We reach the fortress of warlike Aodh, we are admitted into Ronan's rath: Aodh was not within, he had gone into dangerous Breifne.
Conan sees the gentle woman, and sits down by her shoulder: 'Carry away the woman,' said the youth, 'without leave, by main force.'
Soon thereafter came from the north the son of Ronan of the hard sword: he went forthwith to the fortress where he had left the maiden.
They tell Aodh of the warlike weapons that Eargna has been carried off by Conan from stream-bright Siuir of the bright currents to spacious Almha of Leinster.
' It is no breach of my vow, what Conan who has loved me has done: I wish joy to the bold hero who has got a good wife meet for him.'
Happy was their union for both, Conan and fair comely Eargna, till love for the woman wounded the son of Fionn in his inmost bosom.
None dared to solve the matter : Oisin possessed her in her despite : Conan was-count them one by one-the ninth furious husband of Ireland.

To Rath Cianaidh went the prince, and there remained for a year, without war, without rent, without tribute, in the company of Caoilte son of Ronan.
It was one day when we were at the Boyne, when Osgar swore a great vow, that he would not retreat (from a foe) westward or eastward as long as he might live.
Thereupon said Aodh to Osgar, 'If thou fulfillest the sweet-sounding vow, happy the man that lives thy life, son of weapon-wide Oisin!
'Tell me, valorous Fionn, son of Cumhall from Almha, where wilt thou find west or east, a place where I have broken my word?'
'A worse disgrace has befallen thee,' said blade-bare Fionn, 'that without wedding-gift, without seemly courtship, thy daughter' hath been taken against thy will.'
Aodh replied with ready voice, 'My dishonour shall be rued : I will kill Conan for his exploit, and I will have my daughter.'
'Say it not,' said Fionn of the feasts to Aodh, son of active Ronan, 'but demand justice man to man right sturdily from the Grey Man's son.'
When we were at the foot of Erne, all of us mingled together, Aodh demanded of ringleted Conan the lawful price of that wife.
'Unless thou say the girl herself,' said prudent Conan, 'I have vowed my vow of note that thou shalt get nothing while thou livest.'

- This is the time I shall know it,' said Aodh above the waterfall : he went in his warrior's gear to join the high encounter.
Conan in wrath made for his green red-centred shield : the warrior who was never slow takes his sword and his helmet.
We went to the Island of Birds, that is now called Inis Saimhéir : woe worth who allowed to come man to man Ireland's two pillars of battle!
Woe worth who looked upon the men, woe worth the heroes by whom it was allowed, woe worth who allowed to come man to man the two battle-champions of the Fians of Ireland!

Woe worth who gave the sudden blow to Conan in the equal fight: when he cleft the head to the bone through the middle of Conan's helmet.
Conan gave, with accurate judgment, a sword-blow to Aodh in his shoulder, hewing off his head and his right arm with his skilful hero-like blow.
Conan the well-beloved rises up after the duel: Ronan's son of comely complexion was buried in the island.
A week and a month a-bed was battle-waging Conan: the leeches had expected him to come whole of his wounds at once.
A year was Conan in the world until the day when he went mad along the road of Dáil the brown in the plain above Eachdhruim.
A renomed worm had entered his head through the venom of Aodh Rinn's sword : he died on Magh Dála of the fords of an illness of four day-thirds.
That is the tragedy of Aodh Rinn, O Patrick of the resonant croziers, how by the hand of the Grey Man's son who was not feeble he fell in the combat.
I have recourse, O Patrick, to thy cross: many vain thoughts I have entertained: I delight not in pleasure nor in drinking since the Fian has gone into oblivion.
I am the fierce Dubh-déad, whom the Fian's chief has left behind: from this day I am women's foe, well I know the Fian's fate. I know the story.

II.

Fionn's Foray to Tara.

Thou rememberest, generous Oisin, our visit to strong Tara, twice eight men, givers of cloaks, to feast at Cormac's house.
I pledge my word stoutly, good Caoilte son of Ronan, I am wise in the roots of kindred of the matter whereof thou askest.
When the drinking went to Cormac's head, he challenged Fionn to battle: it was he that rued the fact by reason of which they held conflict.

Cormac said to my father, Cormac son of Art, son of Conn of the Hundred Battles, that vindictively he would make Fionn pass under the fork of the cauldron.
'In all we have hitherto done-bright its fame,' Fionn of the Fian said, 'though thy heart be strained for it, the winning of every game has been mine.

- If again we meet thee in fight, Cormac from whom we levy tribute, thou man shalt not be forgiven, our sides-taking shall be rued.'
- Thy father did not succeed, great Cumball of battles, when he rose against Conn-the cause why we are now at quarrel.'
'Ye were thirty battalions against Cumhall the fortunate : though your weapons (?) were swift to encounter him, ye did not ward off his one hand.
- With Conn and Goll at his right, by his shield's help he was not skill-less: though all the men of Ireland were wounding tawny skilful Cumhall.
'Had it not been for the men of Munster and the Connachtmen of the warriors, a spear's rivet he would not have yielded to the whole house of Feidhlimidh.'
Then said the son of great Morna, Garadh that was not wont to be overcome, 'Too great is the taunt, Fionn, that thou givest to the race of comely Conn.'
Fionn said, as is well known, 'They have not done well by me: they forced entanglements on me, and they slew my worthy father.'
'He himself was to blame in that, who carried Muireann off by force : we gained the fair battle of Cnucha over great Cumball, son of Tréanmhór.'
Fionn asked Garadh, having sat down along with him, 'Since you then were present, how was Cumball killed ?'
'We were sixteen men of the House of Morna, to tell the truth: we thrust every man his spear into the side of Cumball the champion.'
'How answered he that, a stroke of assault against the champion? A blessing on thee, speak but justice, though thou hate the race of Tréanmhór.'
'Two wounds came for one from Cumhall, from the champion : though thy kinsman boasted not, (two wounds) in payment for each single wound.'
It was then that Oscar said-a speech that was rude in its bluntness-' Thou shouldst get single combat in this house, even were Fionn in France.'
Cairbre answered that speech, son of the king of high Ireland, - Thou shouldst get combat from his sons, though Cormac were not in Ireland.'
When noble Oscar heard the speech of Cairbre taunting him, he comes furiously to assault him, that he might bring the forecast true.
They spake to good Ciothruaidh, son of Fear Caogad, as was his due, "Sing a song of thy craft to us: it is no time for wrath or conflict."
They restrained all the hosts, yellow-haired Cormac restrained them, until Ciothruaidh sang his song by the flank of the sidestrong house.
Happy for him that sang the song at which the hosts were quieted, when there was no peacemaking in the affair, but that we had not seized our weapons.
Ciothruaidh, equal to a hundred, was rewarded with gold, with silver, and with raiment: it was a fortune for him while he lived, what he got on the spot among us.
No sleep from that till day for man or boy or woman: not one answering the other for fear of the second outbreak.
On the morrow we and they ratified the terms of battle; we did not break our engagements till we adopted a common counsel.
Sisteen men were we on foray, of the House of victorious-wounding Baoiscne, on the quarrel of furious (?) Fionn and Cormac from sloping Tara.
The House of Morna held aloof from us, and the House of Iollann without sadness, and the House of Ronan of brightness (?) they remained in neutrality.
We went then to Eamhain, charmed banners above our spears; we deemed not a danger against us our equal number of the Gaedhil.

Good Faolán desired to make a cattle-raid at that time : I checked him from the raid till the hosts of Tara should be loosed.
We go to Aonghus the Young, the Daghdha's son of the clean roads: we and Aonghus made peace and forsook our strife.
We set forth-great was our glory-on a foray to wave-white Tara ; sixteen men without one lacking, and Aonghus guiding us.
These were the sixteen men,-it is no falsehood, my Caoilte: I know-they are no idle words-their number, their names.
I myself was number one of them, two was Oscar without folly: three Fear Logha, comely and just, and four O Conbhróin.
Five was Aodh the Little of great grace, and the sixth was MacLughach, the seventh Daolghus, and the eighth Fearghus.
The ninth my father Fionn himself, ten was Fearrdhomhain, right smooth, eleven Colla, comely, ringleted, twelve eye-grey Raighne.
Thirteen Ailbhe the truthful, then Faobhrachán of the hundreds of deeds, fifteen Caince of the crafts, and sixteen blade-red Iollann.
We set off with ten hundred cows from Tara, though it was a great strain; ere we left Taillte of the cloaks behind, Cairbre and Cormac overtook us.
They come from east and from west, Cairbre and Cormac on one track : never had I seen a levy that was sturdier in pursuit.
As a service, Aonghus undertook for us that day in front of the army-he who was fortunate without defect-alone to drive the spoil.
I pledge my word for it, if Caoilte but remembered, that he never saw a harder foray, were it not for its briefness.
We threw ourselves like men across the trail, we routed the hosts of Tara, we wounded Cormac of the feasts, and we captured skin-white Cairbre.
He , too, plied a hidden shooting, the son of the fierce-wounding Daghdha: each one that was slain with might, Aonghus was taking all their spoils.
Every cow that was parted from the prey, he carried off on a steed's back; there was not left the value of a Bregian horse of the prey with the host of white Tara.

Cormac and Cairbre, son of Ireland's high king, offer to bring us herds without delay, on condition of our not taking Cairbre.
' If thou gave all Ireland,' said Faolán of yellow locks, 'we would take no terms from thee in this, but to make thyself go under the fork.'
We made no peace with Cormac, great as was his fury, till he went there under the fork in the sight of the men of Ireland.
When Fionn of valour saw Cormac go under the fork, he went himself under the other end, the high champion of Almhain.

Till he cleft the massive bar, cleft the five-hand cauldron, till the beautiful sword went seven feet's length into the earth.
That is my account for thee, whosoever may deny it, Caoilte, son of Fionn's sister, son of Cumhall's daughter.
I wish Cionaoth joy of my going, alas that my life has not failed : my bitterness has spoiled a bright mind, my heart's weariness since I remember.

Thou rememberest.

III.

The Rowan-tree of Clonfert.

Thou Rowan-tree of Clonfert, we went from thee on an expedition to Cronnmhoin of the hundreds of hosts, an event through which fell Suca Great-nose.
On that day, fair Rowan-tree, was many a brave man by thy side, under Goll from the pleasant bright cow-fold, under Garaidh from the red-mottled summit.
Under Daighre of the harp of music, a-playing for us sweetly, gently, under Conan and his bright kin, under Aodh, under Art of the maidens.
Under Glas from Glais Leacach of pools, and minder Art from the turf-bright plain, under Conn from white Bearramhain, under Cas and under Cannan.
And under the Red Man from Raith na bh-Fian, and from Fionnros too of the Fians, under Aonghus from the round Craoibheach and under the Strong Hand from Liathdruim.

Ten hundred handsome shield-bearers of the house of the grandmother of keen Goll: on that day we were filled on this hillock, O Rowan-tree.
From thee we went southward to Dún Glais of the cold water : merry were we at evening, on the night before Cronnmhóin's battle.
Goll, handsome of body, said ' Let us be watchful here to-night: I recognize,' said the valorous lord, 'Fionn's keen fetch coming against me.'
The Black River came by our side, we passed the ford of Inis Aodha ; Leogha was left on guard at the pool, and I on the Rowantree hill.
Feorann and Modha, for my love, guarding the two fords: and Goll, to Goll's ford went he, guarding against Fionn of Almha.
No place from the Blue River of the Fians as far as Ráith Fraoich to the west of us without an officer over nine fierce men of the House of Morna till the morning.
As it came on to evening, Fionn comes with six brave battalions; Frenchmen, Englishmen among them, Welshmen, Irishmen, men of Islay.
They sat down, a formidable camp, at the ford where Goll stayed: the son of Morna is sleeping soundly, he has heard neither shout nor turmoil.
Seventeen day-thirds was weapon-clear Iollann without sleep, without slumber, having taken but one draught of clear pleasant water and five berries of the rowan.
'Twas no wonder that pleasant Goll was famished, wearied, exhausted, watching against Fionn of the Fians from Cliodhna's Wave to the Curlew Hills.
At close of night upon his couch, when men and woods were one in hue, Fionn of bright aspect awoke : he rises in the early morn.
When he had reached the ford, Cumhall's son, undetected of the others, it is not long till the hero heard there the hero's hollow snore.
Swiftly he came across the ford, found Goll in a heavy sleep : Fionn unsheathed the hard sivord above the son of mane-red Morna.
(ioll awoke, and not in fright, at the weapon-clang of the fierce sword : raised his hand to his spear, brandished the quivering shaft.
'Were it my pleasure,' said Fionn, 'thou great Goll that ill obeyest me, long since I had set with my blade thy head on a hard wattle of Rowan-tree.
"I have taken from thee thy shapely shield, and I have taken thy blue keen knife: here, take, ere thou make for home, thy battle gear, my hero.

- Rise up, Goll, take thy lance, summon to thy side the House of Morna: see there the brave battalions come against thee in the narrow of Cronnmhóin.'
'My blessing on thee, noble Fionn : it is folly for me not to submit to thee: ten hundred under young Art of the spears, lo! here against thee of my nation.
- Ten hundred under terror-striking Garaidh, they have come between thee and the ford: raise thy spear above thy arm : seest thou the array of Conan's hosts?'
' Protect me thou against them all, and escort me across the ford: ward off from me thy nation and thy kin, ere my mortal wounding befall.'
'Go forth under my protection into the shallow : quickly, Fionn. seize thy weapons, till I escort thee,' quoth bright Goll, ' whole without wound from my nation.'
Goll escorted Fionn of the Fians unwounded of all as he askedthere was the great hero!-as far as the very midst of the army.
Five battalions attacking Goll till he got back over the ford : they parted not from the brave hero till he reached the centre of Cronnmhóin.
Oisn's spear, hardy Caoilte's spear, and stout Raighne's lance, high in air they quickly fall like rays into the grasp of Goll.
Firmly, fiercely we mahe our way under Goll of the good House of Morna-happy his grandsire's race-ten hundred red shields in the rear.
Goll before us and Goll behind us on high Croummhóin of long weapons: we from him and to him as it were the brood of it sow.

Eastward or westward we shook not off Caoilte and Oisin and noble Fionn, Conbrón's son Caireall who loved me, with his seventeen hundred of Scotland's levy.
The House of Cúán, the House of lasting Baoiscne, and the House of stout Rónán, Dubh Diothrabh's race that were no weak array, upon our heels as far as Duibhféith.
Then goes Goll out of our midst to the wounding of Caireall of comely form: three hundred he bravely slew on the hard flank of Cronnmhóin.
Hardy Caireall came up to us with Scotland's excelling soldiery: he left ten hundred dead on the bog, the son of trimmphant Ua Conbróin.
Fionn flanked us on the road, leading a great grim battalion of young fellows : to aid our fair battalion came Iollann against them.
Few as we were ourselves to Fionn's own six battalions, we abandoned neither hound nor man, with Iollann herding us.
Great was our courage and our confidence till at last night fell on us, till we were left worn out on this hillock of the Rowan-tree.
We were staunch, relying on Goll, against every levy ridge on ridge : now that Goll of the feasts lives not, every man is bold against us.
Garailh of fame am I : it is no small part of my heart's anguish, Magh Maoin a wilderness since Goll is gone, and I living on the berries of a rowan-tree.
It is a cause of misery and woe, Magh Maoin without the good House of Morna, myself a refugee from the Fian of Fionn under the shelter of thy branches, 0 Rowan-tree.
Dúnadh Daighre is this western dún, where music and honour were ours: beloved is this lake hard by us, Loch Riach of ruddiest rowan-trees.
Blithely as we were wont to go to the famous chase of Beann Boirne, we would see in beauty from the ridge thy scarlet top, O Rowan-tree.
I will go out into Meath as far as Magh Bile to-morrow : I will burn the womanfolk of the Fian of Fionn : I will not stay under the protection of a rowan-tree.

The next day I will come from the east, I will pass through lovely Gleann Conain : I will eat good apples in the glen, and fragrant berries of rowan-tree.
Here foretold Brendan the famed, and the great prophet will make it good, Heaven for the soul of each one that goes into it, into the earth of the hill of the Rowan-tree.
Druid Diorraing foretold to me, in this wood by my side, that my body should rest in the hollow, beside the hillock of the Rowantree.

Thou Rowan-tree.
IV.

The Battle of Cronnmhórn.
The story of the battle of Cronnmhóin-0 ye who would fain know it-the reckoning of the ralorous heroes, I myself know it well.
The House of gift-giving Ronan and the House of warlike Baoisone: they were in that fray, and the thirty sons of Morna.
The race of Da-Bhoirinn of the trumpets, and the race of Dublı Diothrabl never niggard, into that battle they went together, and the House of Neamhnann.
To engage that hosting, great Goll, son of Morna, remained unslept, uncrossed, as he kept ward.
Watch for a week's space, kept Goll of the famous feats: yet there would be no stouter lord in the battle on the morrow.
Late at night in the shelter of a tree was Goll of the spears of victory: he saw approach him the poet lad whom they called Daighre of the Songs.
One night's loan of that warden, Goll besought of his kinsfolk: his was the speech that would not be checked in a keen-edged debate.
Goll asked for that poet as an envoy to Cumball's son, to find out if he (Fionn) knew in the Fian a man to withstand him.
Fionn of Almhain asked the Fiana of Ireland altogether, ' Who will go with good heart against Goll of the sharp spears?'
Fionn of keen speech said that his son had the best right: Oisin of many tongues replied that he would not ward off Morna's son.

Oscar of the great exploits said, 'Good is every son that is like his father': no need to say, thought he, that he would not go against Goll.
Answering the king-feinnidh, Fátha Canann said, 'Whoever will be a fool, let him go, so will I not.'
Though it ill pleased our chief-feinnidh, Diarmaid 0 Duibhne said that he himself would not go in his battle-gear against the band of that Goll.
The son of Fionn's son and daughter, who was named MacLughach, thought it was no deed to be demanded, to go to face the champion.
Fionn, when he was refused, turned his face to Caoilte : after the others quickly, his refusal was just as ready.
Fionn spoke growing angry, having besought them for a while: - An act like that ye have never done, ye brood of farmers and clowns.'
To meet Goll for the king-feinnidh Caireall 0 Conbroin promised : ' It is not such a foolish feat as has ever been promised by a buffoon.'
Daighre brought these words with him to his kinsman's presence: that a reluctant company had undertaken to stay Goll on the morrow.
'There will not come to fight me Fátha Canann or Caoilte,' said Goll ready of word, ' nor the nobles of the House of Baoiscne.
' I tell my brother, since it is he that will not repeat it, that I reck no danger of Ua Conbróin with his nobles.'
Goll believed these tidings that Daighre Duanach told: having instructed him, the poet left him.
Goll went afterwards to listen to the House of Baoiscne, to learn who should dare to come against him joyfully.
He heard the great array being arranged by the king of the Fian, the Fians of the Five Fifths together against Goll.

- I send Caoilte the accurate and shaft-strong Sen-Iobhar : to stay Goll will not be out of their power : the king of Lochlainn's sons and their brave host.
- Donn Mor of Monadh Eachtcolla, the two sons of Ruadh of the Scottish border : this band of feats is wont to be in the front of the valiant fight.
'Goll of Golba and Cas of Cuailnge, the two king-feinnidhs of the Ulster Fians: the people of the two clear pillars together staying the champion.'
Thongh Fearrdhomhain was a king-feinnidh over fierce and formidable Fians, it was folly for himself to oppose Morna's son.
The king-feinnidh of Ui Chinnsealaigh, he deemed himself a successful king: bad was the outcome of his strategy against Goll in this battle.
The Fians of Ormond come in to the battle like all the others: many a youth was stomach-sick for fear of Goll of the fierce exploits.
The Fians of Desmond were called upon by Muirn's son at that time: though it caused them great confusion, they came hither in arms.
The sturdy Fians of Thomond, amid the Fian they come : that was their loud lament before they separated.
By the son of Muirn of the Lovely Neck the Connacht Fian was asked to join the rest in dealing blows against Goll in the fray.
The Rough Household were sent by the son of Cumball Ua Baoiscne, a fierce band with pearly weapons, against Goll on that side.
The House of mighty Neamhann the son of Cumhall deemed, till they were sent into that fray, that Goll had met none to with. stand him.
With not a man missing, on the north side of Cronnmhóin Fioun placed that band along with Caireall Ua Conbróin.
The King of Leinster of heavy fruit, Munster's two kings, though it was [a mark of] suljection, on the south side of Cronnmhóin, Fionn himself and the House of Baoiscne.
Goll famed for deeds came away after this division, till he came up to the king-poet who was called Daighre Duanach.
Since that heavy host was to be called on by Fionn to stay Goll, be asked the poet which of the House of Morna was this Goll.
'Thyself they have named, since the day the battle of Cnucha was fought, "Goll" because thou wast maimed in the eye : there Cumball struck thee.
'For fear of thy hand that name was hidden from thee by warlike Muirn's son, O hated high-achieving Goll.'
- If against me are gathered all that Cumhall's son has named, needs must preparation be made for them ere that army come up to us.'
After that watch that Goll had kept for seven nights, his keenedged weapons were set beside Iollann in a bundle.
A spell of sleep was taken thereafter by Morna's son, so that Fionn heard the groaning breath of the hero hard by the oak.
Fionn set off alone to find out who slept thus, till he spied the one youth with none in his company.
The king-feinnidh meditated, since they were alone, the slaying of Goll foolishly, for none would know who should have done it.
Fearghus Wine-mouth arose out of his sleep to follow Fionn: he saw deed-achieving Goll, and Fionn about to smite him.
Then spake that poet to Cumhall's son in edged words: not to attempt treachery, fame lasts longer than life.
Gold-weaponed Iollann awoke when he heard Fionn and the poet: by the son of victory-reckoning Cumhall duel forthwith is demanded.
Goll refused to fight that duel with the Fian's king : he said it was ill-tasting for leaders to fight each other.
Fionn the prince-feinnidh said that that was not his reason: that were Goll in his battle-gear he would desire to slay him.
Fionn put that harness piece by piece on his limbs: Goll rose up in manly guise thereupon against him.
Fionn objected to doing that combat with Morna's son : said that combat were not seemly, unless all men might look on.
The two king-feinnidhs part in that hour from each other : foolishly they fixed a day of meeting on the morrow.
Readily answered, when Glas Greine had been unfurled, the two right active good heroes Cronnmhóin's tryst against each other.

Cumball's son full crafty stayed not for the son of Morna: with foresight he distributed all his men on the out-gates of the bog.
Ua Conbróin and all we have named above in the first part of this tale, against rear-protecting Goll they all advanced together.
The onset of Goll of many exploits was not a face to a friend : the way of a hawk at small-birds was how he went against them.
The sons of Lochlainn's king of the swift barks were in the forefront of the fight: Morna's son dealt swift death to them, and their woe was none the less.
Ossory's host under Fearrdhomhain, who of that host was not slain? the Ulstermen there lay keen-wounded, no better fared the King of Scotland's sons.
The noble Fians of Ormond withdrew not unscathed : the Ceinnsealaigh said that this battle was not what they were used to.
And the Desmond Fians were torn up in that fight by Morna's son : I am not astray about it-every hero of them in two pieces.
The gift-giving Fian of Thomond, in that affray though they obeyed-what know I if ye have heard?-they did not escape for that time.
I will not over-lengthen what was done by Morna's son: one man to boast the news came not away of this host.
By Fionn on the other side the sons of Cormac were routed : great was the cause of haste: Goll covered the retreat from him.
To the stream-green Shannon in that hour he turned-no more difficult movement was ever met-till he sent them past his flank.
Goll made active work, few or many though they were : till they reached Duibhfleith they suffered neither death nor wounding.
The House of Baoiscne was left that day in rueful plight by the single hand of that Iollann : thus the tale is told.
Though lovely be that rising ground on which ye stand, ye churchmen : mournful to-day am I as I tell this tale.
I am the king-feinnidh's son who was called Oisin of exploits: long am I wandering in mind : Patricis, that is my story. The Story.
V.

The Bathing of Oisin's Head.
Woman, bathe this head of mine: long since it parted with the Fian of Finn: this year and five, a long space, it has had no woman to bathe it.
This night sixteen years agone, happy was I with my fine head of hair : hard to know in it that head since it lost its wave-yellow torch-flame.
Ah, me! that is the poor head that hounds used to raise their houndcry round: if it was the day on Leitir Lon, it would have women to bathe it.
Its outing to Leitir Lon-an outing on which great spoils used to be taken-when we killed brown stags above the brink of Loch Liathdroma.
An argument we had over there, I and light-footed Caoilte, when we divided the pleasant chase through quarrel and contention.
Darling Caoilte said-a man that was no shirker of combat, that excelled in bestowing cow and horse-that he was the greater champion.
I said he spoke untruly, the true prince,-it is no falsehood : though it fell out that I said so, dear Caoilte was indeed my friend.
Caoilte went to Ceann Con, I go to Leitir Lon : Caoilte with his fortunate folk, and I my lief alone.
Caoilte of the battles did not kill that day with his swift shootingthe man that often won fame-but one doe and one stag.
I vow to you, woman-it is no time for me to tell lies-that there came out with me over the plain thrice fifty fierce stags.
By thy hand, young woman, the cooking of Formaoil profited: thrice fifty stately stags in this place, with fifty pigs thrown in.
My shooting on Leitir Laoigh was not the tender shooting of a stripling: thrice fifty deer on the field, with the threescore wild pigs.
The hound I held in my active hand-Gaillfheith, Fionn mac Cumhaill's hound-there never touched the warm earth a hound that could win the day from Gaillfheith.

The small spear I had in my hand-seven rivets holding it-often had my hand been on its shaft, along the slope it was not unsteady.
A good spear was Fionn's spear : there was great venom in its steelblue point: anyone whose blood it ever let never tasted foor in his life again.
If it were that day, woman, to come to me above any man, thou wouldst wash my two hands, thou wouldst not aroid me.
It is a pity thou didst not do this for me, thou quiet, fair-haired girl, to lay my head on the cold pile of stone, and to wash for burial my poor bald pate.
Fine was the beauty of the fair hair that all men saw on my head: it has left me for good and all, till I am a disease-smitien grey-face.
Fine was the lustre of my hair, it was a fine setting for a body: never came through head's bone hair so good but the hair of Fionn.
Aye, and these teeth up here, away up in the old head, they were once on a time that they would crunch yellow-topt nuts.
They could gnaw a stag's haunch, hard and hungry and houndlike : they would not leave joint or jot of it but they would make mince-meat of.
Aye, and these eyes up here, away up in the old head, though they are roots of blood to-night, they were once thin pearly gems.
On a night of dark blind weather, they would not cause a stray step : to-night, though I should look out, I cannot see the fair.
Aye, and these legs below, nothing could have wearied them : tonight they are bowed and bent, pitiful, shrunken-sided.
Though they are without power or vigour-I cannot even turn them -they were swift on a time to follow the phantom of Fionnmhagh.
The phantom of Fionnmhagh on Magh Maoin, we got a turn of his ill-nature : on Sunday he was on the plain of Meath, when Cormac took . . . . (?)
The Fiana ran towards him, sure they were that they would overtake the phantom: they did not overtake him, though fierce their effort, except Oisin in Argadros.

The poor Oisin thou seest here, he encountered great harm and hardship, following the phantom southwards to cold Bearnan of edge-feats.
There he leapt a bold leap, highly, terribly, outlandishly, and he reached its arm with swiftness, up in the air he struck it.
I dealt a brave and hardy blow over its hideous clammy arm : I smote, without scarcity, on the eastward, the gold from its paw into the shield.
The little shield that was on my arm, over which I hewed the monster's paw, even had it desired the gold, it would have had it in its middle.
Ten rings in it of gold for Fionn, and ten for Croibhfinn, ten of them for Goll's daughter, and ten for the daughter of Iorgholl.
The reckoning of its gold from that out, besides gold that was hidden, even a seer does not know, for the greatness of its treasures.
I know ten hiding-places of Fionn's of treasures that I remember: pity they should be under the warm earth, each hiding-place having ten treasures.
His handsome drinking-horns are there, beside the pillar-stone of Carn Aodha: on the hillock hitherward from it he hid ten garments.
Beneath it are hunting spears wherewith red-headed stags were wounded: dear was the hero's hand that grasped them, meetly the stone of Almhain hath covered it.
Goblets that held the ale are there, beside the waterfall of Modhorn : let whoso seek them might and main, they shall not be found till the end of all.
These and the other treasures of Fionn, above all men might I reveal: I know no treasure of them all without its mounting of white bronze.
All we got in the lasting world, they would be numerous to recount : all that we laid in peopled earth will not be found till doom, woman.
I am left behind all these-it is right to thank the Lord for itwithout vigour, without power while I live, at the back of Cionaodh's fortress.

Patrick's baptism is better for me than the deceitful bathing of women, protecting churches and peoples and habitations: if God permits it, do it, woman.

Woman.

VI.

The Fray at Loch Luig.

Our night was cold in Loch Luig: we got no rest: when Fionn of the Fian went to the chase of rugged Eichtghe.
Aodh son of Morna son of Gara comes to bring us to a feast-his decision was to bring us all to Loch Riach of the kings.
Fionn himself went not with him but stayed on the green mountain : the huts were in the garth : it was a geis for him to leap a camping place.
We went five men courageous and twenty famous warriors; four with each youth went forth, five-and-twenty under arms.
We rested after our hunting, as many as we were of Fians : though our force and our fame were great, we were glad to get a night's sleep.
At Dumha Mhuc, Cormac had a rearguard, Lunna and his big sons; they were a full valiant division.
After this we went to his house: better for us we had not gone at all : a dispute befell, not happily: it was no friendly meeting.
We went to the Lios of the Wells, and we did not get admission : they thought no more of all our music than of the wolves of the wood.
Diarmaid O Duinn said, 'If the gate be not opened to us, I will leap the rampart before me that I may avenge my despite.'
Diarmaid O Duibhne leapt that rampart without taking counselthe agility of his legs was agile indeed-and he opened the door to us.
On the other side by twilight rise Lunna and his big sons, fifty clean-cut Norsemen-it was a contest well matched in fierceness.

The host kill each other above the border of the green mountain ; neither comrade nor friend escaped of the light-armed youths.
Diarmaid 0 Duinn fought with Leacach the fierce from Lochlainn; Mac Lughach the able fought on the slope with Leacán.
Renowned Oisin fought with full valiant Lunna: and Oisin was hard pressed in fight by the outlander.
I fight on the northern side with hardy Ciorcall on the slope : Oscar was engaged by Greallach of the gravel lands.
We were ten in this way, we and the outlanders: our weariness came not till day with its full light.
On the morrow's morn we all abandoned our missile casting : Oscar of weapon-feats beheld Oisin in straits.
Oscar's spirit rose when the hard hand-to-hand fight was knit : and he quickened his hand in the hope of rescuing Oisin.
Oscar beheaded Greallach with his leaping sword of virtue: he slew Lunna the mariner : Oscar was worn out by it.
Towards able Mac Lughach rushed Oscar to slay Leacán : he went to his country across the stream of nighness (?) : the head of swift Leacach was taken off.
Great Oscar came up to me after victory of spoil and combats : we rested on the slope of the hill after victory of spoils and duel.
The cool water of Loch Luig, wo to him that mixes it in his food : for in it were left that time the Norsemen lying.
Cormac, grandson of Conn, is angered about his men against Cumhall's son: he grieved till his dying day for the death of his rear-guard company.
Flaithri and Fiothal are summoned to the presence of wrathful Cormac the sage: to give judgment in no light cause between Fionn and Cormac.
The men were awarded guilty : it is no right to deny the first guest : the judgment of the pure judges was, that they were guilty in their refusal.
I have not seen Oscar's equal in giving battle or single combat, except the hero Lughaidh Lágha, against any heavy odds.
All the champions of the earth, let them be in one man's body, grievous bloodshed they had suffered from the sword of mightily wounding Oscar.

There has not come on earth since battle-armed Conall a hero more spirited against odds than Oscar of the great deeds.
There has not taken lance in hand the equal of Diarmaid of the modest face, anear or yet afar, since Lugh Long-arm.
Oisin would have stood his ground best after the champions of Ireland, were quarrel but allowed him, against twenties or single adversaries.
Fierce MacLughach used to blood his sword first of all in combat: he used to excel them all in taking the spoil of his first slain.
I know not my own fault: as good a man as any in the comparison. I used to take no advantage in combat, and to avoid no odds.
That is the true account of us, my comrades and fellow-guards: the Fiana of Finn would believe the account I am giving.
From the house of Muireadhach, son of Flann, and of Manainn from Maona, I used to seek crags and havens and chilly lieights.
Fionn of the Fian foretold for me that, after the Rising, the sun should come across my cheek in Ard Da Fhian refreshingly.
Ard Da Fhian I do not know on the surface of land or earth, but be it near me or far away, I shall get a place of coolness. Cold.

Caollte's Mischief-Making.

I boast the morning for the deed : we were blood-stained and giddy: the Fians used to wash off their blood above the banks of Druim Eoghabhail.
I hewed down the hero without ruth, where we held our struggle, when we fought the battle there in which I carried off the head of Cuirreach.
I made lively play that day, I gave warning of wastings, I let their calves go to their cows in all Ireland weapon-strong.
I made lively play that day, I gave warning of wastings, with skilful feat I caused weeping in every house in Ireland.
I made lively play that day, I gave warning of wastings, and by me were burned utterly the mills and kilns of Ireland.

Next were let loose by me the swift horses of Ireland: I escape them by the swiftness of my feet until I reached Argad-ros.
Next I went over (to Tara) and the doorkeeper admitted me (?), and that night without doubt I was candle-bearer to Cormac.
Then said to me over there the noble high overking of Ireland, 'A marvel is the thing I see with full heed, Caoilte's two eyes in my candle-bearer.'
'Bless thee, say not so,' quoth Fionn, quoth the chief of the fairhaired Fiana; ' though I am in fetters in thy house, do not revile my people.
'That is not Caoilte's mind, beyond any man of thy folk of songs: he would not carry a shapely candle for all the gold in thy coffer.'
When the drinking was finished by the full fierce and mighty king, I go with him-it was no crooked step-till he reached the common house.
To this end I brought southward-greatly I desired its harmful power-and I brought with me with full intent the moss of high Seasgann Uairbheoil.
I gave in warm Tara one companion's wife to another : the wife of this companion I give away to that bedfellow.
I brought Cairbre's wife in sooth, and gave her to Cormac: I brought Cormac's wife likemise and gave her to Cairbre.
I put the king's sword in my own sheath, though it was a bold deed : my own sword Bright of Hilt I placed in Cormac's sheath.
Having fooled him, I asked him at rising time on the morrow, 'Will you tell me now what would ransom my master?'
' If thou fetch here the fierce wild man, and the taloned soaring griffin, and the ravens of the wood of Dún Dá Bheann, two ducks from Loch Goibhneann.

- Two martens from leafy woods on the side of Druim Dhá Raon, and two otters next from brown-white Coradh Doghair.
-Two stags from high Eichtghe, two blackbirds from Leitir Lonnghairg, two wrens from Dún Aoife, two "dog-heads " from Corraoife.
"Two "troses" from Doire Dhá Dos, two turtle doves from Damhros, two bernacle geese from Loch Dá Dhall, the two swans of Iorros Domhnann.
- The lanky fox of Sliabh gCuillinn, two wild dogs (wolves) from Boireann, two swans from the wood of blue Gabhra, two woodcocks from Fordruim.'
Great was the ordeal he laid on me, it was not easy to fulfil: it brought me fiercely into strife, to have to follow the pursuit.
I start in pursuit across the lawn-it was a mighty work for one day : yet it were a pleasant deed, a cunning order, to ransom the son of Cumhall.
The raven went southward from me-greatly I desired its harmto MacLughach's ford, known to thee, on the south-west of Lurgan.
The duck went from me through the mire, it was not easy to catch her, over the banks of the swift Barrow, over the shallow of Inbhear Dubhghlaise.
Where the wild man left me, when I was at the end of my strength, was in the middle of the rath of the Fian of Fionn, but I captured him in Crumlin.
I caught the crane by the neck: though she did not like it, she came: and I brought her with me under my control to ransom Fionn from Cormac.
All the hardship I met with them will come against me as long as I live: over each wild and each slope I reached the side of Loisionán.
I have parted with my friends: woe has come in my time: few were my foes each second day: at every time I boast it.

I boast.
VIII.

The Crane-Bag.
I have a question for thee, Caoilte, man of the interchanged weapons: to whom did the good Crane-bag belong that Cumhall son of Tréanmhór had?

A crane that belonged to gentle Manannán-it was a treasure of power with many virtues-from its skin, strange thing to prize -from it was made the Crane-bag.
Tell us what was the crane, my Caoilte of many exploits, or, tell us, man, why its skin was put about the treasures.
Aoife, daughter of dear Dealbhaoth, sweetheart of Ilbhreac of many beauties-both she and Iuchra of comely hue fell in love with the man.
Iuchra, enraged, beguiled Aoife to come swimming, it was no happy visit: when she drove her fiercely forth in the form of a crane over the moorlands.
Aoife then demanded of the beautiful daughter of Abhartach:

- How long am I to be in this form, woman, beautiful breastwhite Iuchra?'
'The term I will fix will not be short for thee, Aoife of the slowglancing eyes: thou shalt be two hundred white years in the noble house of Manannán.
'Thou shalt be always in that house with everyone mocking thee, a crane that does not visit every land: thou shalt not reach any land.
' A good vessel of treasures will be made of thy skin-no small event: its name shall be-I do not lie-in distant times the Crane-bag.'
Manannán made this of the skin when she died: afterwards in truth it held every precious thing he had.
The shirt of Manannán and his knife, and Goibhne's girdle, altogether: a smith's hook from the fierce man: were treasures that the Crane-bag held.
The King of Scotland's shears full sure, and the King of Lochlainn's helmet, these were in it to be told of, and the bones of Asal's swine.
A girdle of the great whale's back was in the shapely Crane-bag: I will tell thee without harm, it used to be carried in it.
When the sea was full, its treasures were visible in its middle: when the fierce sea was in ebb, the Crane-bag in turn was empty.

There thou hast it, noble Oisin, how this thing itself was made: and now I shall tell its faring, its happenings.
Long time the Crane-bag belonged to heroic Lugh Long-arm : till at last the king was slain by the sons of Cearmaid Honeymouth.
To them next the Crane-bag belonged after him, till the three, though active, fell by the great sons of Míle.
Manannán came without weariness, carried off the Crune-bag again: he showed it to no man till the time of Conaire came.
Comely Conaire slept on the side of Tara of the plains: when the cunning well-made man awoke, the Crane-bag was found about his neck. Etc.

Goll's Malediction.

My curse on the House of Baoisene, at end of night on the crag: they should learn my wrath if my friends were many.
My blessing on the House of Morna, that has suffered hardship from many unearthly beings: to-night though it be the end of night, on the House of Baoiscne my curse.
All except Fionn alone: by his edge hath phantom fallen: bad for me the end of his craft: on the House of Baoiscne my curse.
Often I met with straits in a hostel, though I am worse beset on the crag: I shall be for ever lamented: on the House of Baoiscne my curse.
Daughter of Conall of Cruachain, whose friends are few, bring a blessing to my friends, bring the Leinstermen my curse.
Sgiath Breac son of Dathchaoin lives not: there is no other reliance since my friend is gone: no more lives Goth Gaoithe: on the House of Baoiscne my curse.
I got the haunch of a wild stag from Caoilte, and it was a friend's gift: my blessing on him seven times, on the House of Baoiscne my curse.

I am not thankful to the House of Ronan, my many friends are no more : that is the end of my lay: on the House of Baoiscne my curse.
When Patrick comes to Banbha, it shall not be an abode of evil beings : I leave my welcome to meet him, to the House of Baoiscne my curse.

Goll's Parting with his Wife.

- Woman, take away my tunic : rise up and go from me: prepare to depart, clear one of rosy cheeks, the morn before my slaying.'
' O Goll, what way shall I take? alas for those whose friends are ferv! rare is the woman that has grace, when she is left without head, without lord.'
'Seek the camp of Fionn of the Fiana in its place on this westward side ; wed there, gentle one of red lips, some good man worthy of thee.'
' What man there might I wed, my great Goll that wast kind to me? where might I find west or east thy equal for a bedfellow?'
' Wilt thou have Oisin son of Fionn, or Aonghus son of Aodh Rinn, or muscular bloodstained Caireall, or the hundred-wounding Corr Chos-luath?
'Conall of Cruachain is my father: I am fellow-fosterling to Conn of the Hundred Battles: brother to me in the northern land is Ceidghein son of shaft-stout Conall.
- It is the harder for me to leave thee, that thou art my gentle sweet first husband: seven years of bravery agone, thou broughtest me, husband, to thy couch.
'From that night until to-night, thou hast not shown me a barsh mind: from this night out I will not be light-minded, I will belong to no man on the surface of earth.
- Thirty days living without food scarcely was ever man before thee : a hundred heroes, Goll, by thy hand have fallen on the narrow crag.'
- Wide is the sea around us, and I on the narrow of the crag: hunger for food is betraying me, and thirst is overmatching me.
'Though hunger for food is betraying me, though fierce is the warfare of the five battalions, still more it takes the beauty from my cheek, to have to drink bitter-strong brine.
' My own twenty-nine brothers if one man of the Fian had killed, it would make my peace with him (were he) to relieve me for one night from thirst.'
' Goll son of Moma from Magh Maoin, eat those bodies at thy side : it will relieve thy thirst after [eating of] the men to drink the milk of my breasts.'
- Daughter of Conall, I will not hide it-ah! it is pitiful how this thing has befallen-woman's bidding north or south I will not do and lave never done.'
' Ah ! Goll, it is a woeful plight, five battalions or six against thee, and thou on the corner of a hard crag, a bare lofty chilly crag.'
"That, O red mouth that wast musical, was my one fear on wave or land-Fionn and his Fian pressing on me and I without food in a narrow corner.
'I have stained my shafts right well in the bodies of the House of Tréanmhór: I have inflicted on them suffering and hardship, I have killed shaft-strong Cumhall.
' I brought the Munstermen to grief on the Tuesday in Magh Léana: I delivered battle bravely on the morn in Magh Eanaigh.
' Eochaidh Red-spot son of Mál, of Ulster's proud-faced over-king, I plunged into that hero my spear : I brought them to sorrow, woman.'

XI. The Kindred of Fionn.

Fionn the Poet was a man of beauty, he was a noble leader of Fiana: though we called him Fionn the Poet, he was a dexterous mighty king.
Fionn the Poet was a man of speech, it was he that we called Tréanmhor: he excelled rather in the strength of his feats, nevertheless it was a fitting name.
Two sons had Fionn of valour fierce, Fearghus Luaithfhionn and Eoghan: from them sprang, I know it certain, all the best of the Fiana of Ireland.
One son had noble Eoghan, Oilill muscular, right brave : two sons had Oilill, 'tis truth, Dáire brown and Dorchaidhe.
Fearghus Luaithfhionn, herolike his strength, I am learned in his history : him his foster-mother here called in excess of joy ' Baoiscne.'
Three sons had renowned Baoiscne, brave Cumhall, boaster of victories, Criomball and Aodh Ollach, the greatly fierce and great achieving three.
One son Aodh Ollach had, wrathful right featful Lughailh : one son of the same Lughaidh, fortunate branch-handed Feardhomhann.
Two sons had comely Criomhall, Morann of triumphs and Aodhbeloved the pair of warrior-like grasp, in one day they died.
Oisin son of Fionn of furious valour, Fearghus, Caoinche scarletclear, Uilleann, Faobhar, handsome Raighne, beloved were the comely perfect six (brothers).
Five sons had great Oisin-Oscar and fierce Fear Logha, Eachtach, Uladhach that stayed, and Dolbh Sgeine bright of shield.
One daughter had Fionn of valour fierce, whose name was Lughach, white of hand: man's part she aimed at, curbing her nature, and forsook her womanhood.
One day that they were on the slope, Lughach and Dáire, in the chase, Dáire went, though not easily, unto Lughach in one bed.

Lughach became pregnant by the deed from Dáire, though it was bad friendship : at nine months' end she bears a son that was the envy of the Fiana.
'A wicked lad,' said they all, ' $O$ son of Cumhall of Almhain': Gaoine was his name, for his begetting was a prank (gaoine), Mac Lughach his name after his mother.

XII.

The Household of Almha.

Let us behold Fionn's house in Almha, where kingly warriors used to come: I see that there lives of it no more door-post nor wattle nor pole.
Little I care for the bare site, now that the sunburnt warriors are gone: Ua Baoiscne's seat, though once 'twas gay, to-night is grassy surface-green.
Fair-haired women, with rings of gold, once were here, with drinking-horns: warriors that were staunch in battle, with many-coloured clothing.
Three hundred good cups for strong drink, with thrice fifty golden vessels, thrice fifty goblets of white silver that held the hazel mead of May.
One golden cup, a lovely treasure; a vat of yew for six hundred to drink from : a candelabrum seven feet high, of gold and silver and precious stuff.
A reckoning of a hundred spotless couches, thirty warriors to every bed, around the carven couch of gold of Fionn son of Cumhall, son of Tréanmhór.
Golden ornament throughout, with golden pillars: couches of wattle and plank, a youthful soldiery on the floors.
In comely wise the Fian would come with packs of hounds in handsome leash : thus they were wont to come home, each man bearing his spoils of the chase.
'Twere hard to count the Fian of Fiom, great Patrick of sweetsounding words, unless there might be there within some one who knew their names.

Oisin, son of Fionn, the host was the better for him, Domhnall of bent glance, foot-swift Ceallach, Mac Míleadh and noble Eachluath, Dubh Dromán, and Dubhán.
Oisin's five sons who were not foolish, Oscar and full-wise Fear Logha, [Eachtach] and Uladhach each time, and shield-bright Dolbh Sgéine.
Diarmaid Ó Duibhne from the Brugh, and the ten Oillills from Eadar, ten Dubhthachs from the ridges of Breagha, the ten Moranns of Taillte's plain.
And ten Cormacs from the Cathair, ten Cians, ten Arts, ten Aithghins, the ten Muireadhachs of Magh an Sgáil, ten Conns, ten Flanns, ten Faoláns.
Ten Feardhomhains, ten Ailbhes, ten Collas from the bounds of Cairbre, ten Connlas, ten curly Criomhthanns, ten Fiachras and ten Fearghuses.
The ten Fearghuses of our race, the ten Dáires from Dáirfhine, the ten Muirtheimhnes of the sea, ten Donnghuses, ten Donnchadhs.
Caol Cródha and Conn son of Feabhal, and the Glas son of Dreamhan, Gofraidh of Gleann and Fionn the white, Guaire, Criombthann and Cuián.
Tell thou, their hunting was notable, Cathal, Dubhán and Druimdhearg, Dubh Róid and Ciothach and Conn, Maine and Art and Iorgholl.
Dubh Róid and Dubh Draighin, Faolchú of hard-tempered sword, Glac son of Dearg, son of handsome Diothrabh, Aodh son of Criombthan son of Camlaibh [Amhlaibh ?].
Sealbhach whose speech was musical, Aodh the Fair, Cüán and Eanna, Banbh Sionna and Rionnolbh keen, Mac Deighe and Mac Deithchill.
Dubhán, Dubh Róid, Dubh Dála, Dubh Droma, son of Seanchadh, Flaithre of sharp edge, man of two exploits, Garbh Doire, Dáire, Donnghal.
Suibhne, spear-bearing, smiter of the host, the three sons of browred Aille, Fear Mumhan, Manradh of honour clear, Dorn Tar Malaigh and Guaire.

The two Cüáns from Cuala, the two Brans, they were enduring, Fál Feadha and Fear Sgéith, and Glas son of rough gray Gadal.
Nore I mourn the death of skilful Colla and of Conn and Iaconn and Maine and Core and Ceallach that were handy about slender points.
The death of Oilill and Breasal, not to us it was no loss, the death of Eochaidh and Aodh with their shapely spear-heads.
Three clowns were there within, Cas and Cathmhaol and Cualann, three jugglers, a gentle way, Cleas and Cinnmhear and Cuitbheadh.
The three grooms of Fionn's house, when they used to be in Crumlin, the colour of their six soles was not nice, Corr and Lonn and Luath.
The three fools of Fionn's house, Meall and Maol and Cnap : though they used to follow the Fiana, not much wisdom had the three lads.
His three good butlers, Drúcht, Dásacht and Daithe: his three doorkeepers, a saying without deceit, Druid and Iath and Oslaic.
Fearghus Fion-bhéal, Fionn's poet, he was ecstatic, he was sweet of word: Mac Samhain his just judge, Aodh of the blue nails his candle-bearer.
Beautiful was the bevy of women that were on the banks of Loch Lurgan, with the daughter of comely Cearmaid, with Leannabhair, with Leannchaomh.
With the little woman, sweet-voiced Blánad, with Eare, with stately Sáraid, with Maine, with Eadaoin, with Saor, with Aillbhe, with Cruithgheal the fair-haired.
With Bearrach the freckled, with Bé Bhláith, with tall Téa, daughter of Rónán, Finneabhair finger-slender, of many accomplishments, Eadan the beautiful and Aobhdhonn.
Rónán's son has passed away : all foretold that it should come : by the will of the Son of God, a keen pleasure, by the will of the good King I have beheld.

Let us behold.

XIII.

The Headless Phantoms.
This is a fair in Magh Eala of the king: the fair of Liffey with its brilliancy: happy for each one that goes thither, he is not like Guaire the Blind.
Guaire the Blind was not in truth my name when I used to be in the king's house, in the house of excellent Fearghus on the strand over Bearramhain.
The horses of the Fiana would come to the race, and the horses of the Munstermen of the great races: they once held three famous contests on the green of the sons of Muiridh.
A black horse belonging to Dil, son of Da Chreag, in each race that they held at the rock above Loch Goir, he won the three chief prizes of the fair.
Fiachra then besought the horse from the druid, his grandfather, gave him a hundred cattle of each kind, that he might give it in return.

- There is the fast black horse for thee,' said Fiachra to the Fiana's chief: 'here I give thee my sword of fame, and a horse for thy charioteer.
- Take my helmet equal to a hundred, take my shield from the lands of the Greeks, take my fierce spears and my silvern weapons.
' If it please thee better than to have nothing, chief of the Fiana, handsome king, thou shalt not go off without a gift, chief of the blade-blue Fiana.'
Thereupon Fionn himself arose: he was thankful to Eoghan's son: they salute each other: not without stir was their rising together.
Fionn went before us on the way: we come with him three score hundred; to Cathair to Din-over-Lake, 'tis there we went from the fair.
Three days and three nights in high honour we spent in Cathair's house, without lack of ale or food for Cumhall's son from the great king.

Fifty rings Fionn gave him, fifty horses and fifty cows : Fionn gave the worth of his ale to Cathaoir son of Oilill.
Fionn went to try the black steed to the strand over Bearramhain ; I and Caoilte follow in sportiveness, and we race right cunningly.
Even we were not slow, full swift were our bounds : one of us on his left, one on his right-there is no deer we could not have outrun.
When the king (Fionn) noticed this, he spurred his horse to Tráigh Lí, from Tráigh Li over Tráigh Doimh Ghlais, over Fraochmhagh and over Fionn-ghlais.
Over Magh Fleisge, over Magh Cairn, over the Sean-umair of Druim Garbh, over the brink (?) of the silvery Flesk, over the "Bedside" of the Cochrainn. Over Druim Eadair, over Druim Caoin, over Druim Dha Fhiach, over Formaoil.
When we had come to the hill, we were first by eight times: though it was we that got there first, the king's horse was nowise slow.
'This is night, the day is ended,' said Fionn in good sooth: 'folly it was that brought us here, let us go seek a hunting-booth.'
As the king glanced aside at the crag to his left, he saw a great house with a fire in the valley before him.
Then said Caoilte a stout saying that was no matter for boasting: 'Till this night I have never seen a house in this valley though I know it well.'
'Let us start off,' quoth Caoilte, 'and visit it; there are many things that I am in ignorance of:' a welcome, best of all things, was given to the son of Cumhall of Almhain.
After this we went in on a night's visit that was rued: we were met with screeching, wailing, and shouting, and a clamorous rabbly household.
Within stood a grey-haired churl in the midst: he quickly seizes Finn's horse : he takes down the door on this side from its iron hinges.
We sit down on the hard couch that has to rest us all at once : the $\log$ of elder that is on the hearth has all but quenched the fire.

The unmusical churl spoke a speech that did not greatly please us:

- Rise up, ye folk that are within: sing a song for the kingfeinnidh.'
Nine bodies rise out of the corner from the side next to us: nine heads from the other side on the iron couch.
They set up nine horrid screeches: though matched in loudness, they were not matched in harmony: the churl answered in turn, and the headless body answered.
Though each rough strain of theirs was bad, the headless body's strain was worse : there was no strain but was tolerable compared to the shriek of the one-eyed man.
The song they sang for us would have wakened dead men out of the clay: it well-nigh split the bones of our heads: it was not a melodious chorus.
After that the churl gets up and takes his firewood hatchet, comes and kills our horses, flays and cuts them up at one task.
Fifty spits that were pointed, the which were spits of rowan-on each in turn he puts two joints and sticks them round the fireplace.
No spit of them had to be taught (?), as he took them up from the fire; and he brought before Fionn his horse's flesh on spits of rowan.
- Thou churl, take off thy food : horse-flesh I have never eaten, and never yet will I eat, for the matter of going foodless for one mealtime.'
' If for this my house has been visited, to refuse food,' quoth the churl, 'it will fall out pleasantly for you, Caoilte, Fionn and Oisin.'
With that we started up to get our swords of temper: each man seized another's sword-it was an omen of fist-play.
The fire that was set is quenched, so that neither flame nor embers were visible: a dark and murky corner is narrowed round us three in ore place.
When we were man to man, who should prove our stay but Fionn : slain outright were we, but for Fionn of the Fian.
Man against man we were in the house, the whole long night till morning, until the sun came in at rising time on the morrow.

When the sun rose, down fell each man eastward or westward : into each man's head a black mist came, till they lay lifeless in that hour.
Not long we were in our swoon: we rise up hale and sound: the house had vanished from us, and vanished from us are the inmates.
The party that had fought with us were the Nine Plantoms from Yewvalley, to avenge on us their sister whose name was Cuilleann broad of foot.
In this manner rose Fionn--his horse's reins in his hand : the horse was whole, head and foot : every injury had left him.
I am Caoilte the beloved, left behind the faultless heroes : greatly I miss it out and out that I no longer see the Fair.

This is the Fair.

The Enchanted Stag.

We held a hunt after Hallowtide in the Gorge of Balar's Pig, having passed over Magh n-Ithe, two hundred warriors well weary.
A heavy hog of the breed of Balar's swine we killed after the Hallowtide: a boar of grisly shape, of power, wherefrom the gorge is named.
None had dared to kill him but the Fian of Fionn of surpassing might: of the breed of the swift agile swine that Balar the stout smiter kept.
It was I that first engaged the hog and fought with the great pig: three miles of the hill-top I bore that pig upon my shoulder.
We were in the Pass of Sruthair, one hundred right shapely warriors: with a week's eating in the hog for both hound and man.
Our hunting-it was the glorious hunting that gave the Cooking Copse its name : a hundred stags from every oak-grove that held a bush we laid low around Ruadhros.
A hundred deer, a hundred stags, we killed with our light spears: the sand was red with their blood, though it was a salmonstrewn strand that day.

Oh for the day at Nuadha's-Hand-thou graceless woman that art so surly !-on the chase of Inis Bo Finne when Donn of Dubhlinn fell.
A hundred tender (?) maidens Donn brought with him from the Sith of Aodh: it was a high emprise, it was a famous enchantment, it was an unlovely shape that came on him.
A queen had Aodh without blemish: she fell jealous about the maidens, she turned them into cold deer ranging the plains without escort of horsemen.
Though it was she that wrought the evil, she protected them from peril: no one dared to touch the deer: Donn was herding them.
Ten times was word sent from the queen to strong Donn in secret, that she would be sleepless out of doors till he would come to speak with her.
Donn swore by wind and bright sun, by sea and land of the mighty oaths: 'I am the king's son who will not enter thy house : never will I be on sufferance.'
The queen is enraged with him, with Donn from the Sith of Sliabh Mis : so that she changed his gait abroad, and turned him into the form of a wild stag.
He went off with his herds : their goings were not slow : he grew a growth (?) of flattened points and thus appeared to the men of Ireland.
Donn said-it was a foolish speech-to the son of Cumhall son of Treanmhór that the Fians of Fionn would not dare touch him as long as there was a deer in Ireland.
Fionn said to his Fians: 'Let us all go to seek him: the stag shall not remain at pasture hidden from the Fians.'
I said to him then, to the king of the Fians from Almba, that he would find the stag's encounter fierce that has been turned into [strange] forms before you.

- My hounds will kill the stag, Gaillinn and Sgeolang and Bran : follow ye well every track: there is no shape they do not kill outright.
' I will not feed my hounds,' said Fionn, 'until the stag fall by my hand: whether he keep the middle of the mountain or make is slaughter of the Fian.'

Whenas Fionn had said this, we fell violently ashamed: he sets forth with his company: his household was not downeast.
A hundred and twenty men of us: ten hundred hounds following us : a hundred women and a hundred men [attended] : it was a trysting great enow.
Great was our tumult and the terror we inspired : great was our company and formidable: as we went to hunt the stag, it was a wrathful march from Almha.
We arrived at the pasturage : there was a man of battle there : he was a match for us, it was clear: he killed a hundred at the first attack.
We raised three furious shouts, whereof the loud din was heard unto the heavens: no terror seized the brown stag at the uproar of the men or at their assault.
Bellowing seized him, anger filled him, the fierce brown-red active stag, at the sight of the white hounds, at their terrific guise, at the formidable uproar of the men.
He assembled his deer over the great land, over the plains, and [against him was] a hardy baying pack in Gleann Maghair of the rider-host.
The pack came upon the quarry (?) at the big sea-pool of Ceann Mhaghair: the stag turned his breast to our host: hard ill usage we got of him.
Whoever kept away from him, it was not to face him that Fionn undertook, by reason of the stag's last stand, guarding against them on his feet.
Were it not for me and Fionn's two hounds that followed him from glen to glen, he had left the Fian, by my troth : hard ill usage we got of him.
I tackled the stag in fight, amid the slaughter though alone; the deer were laid low by me, Donn of the deer-herding was laid low.
Domn from the Siodha was the stag, Fionnlaoch's only son, as I know: a stern fate befell him from the queen, that she brought him under heavy vengeance.
Since first I came to life in this world, I met no contest like itmy meeting with the stag face to face, Fiomn foretold it, it befell us.

The Boyhood of Fionn.

Write it, Brogan, a writing in speech full keen and wise-somewhat of the career of Cumhall's son who bore many a distressful bout.
It was the daughter of Tadhg Mor son of Nuadha that brought forth a famous sapling of glowing crown : Glais Dige (Stream of the Dyke) was the first name given him when he was born in that hour.
Bodhmann, fostermother of valour, carried that lad to a secret hill : in the hollow of a tall ivy-clad tree is nursed that noble Fianleader.
He is named the Lad of the Hollow : many a thing of terror for a time befell him : he is kept nourished by Bodhmann on the rich meat of grizzled hogs of the wild swine.
One day he is left alone, who often met danger within great dwellings : a slice from the side of the wild hog was the breast that son of Muirne sucked.
A toghan(polecat?) by the wood-side passes near the hollow : it comes to the smell of the slice (?) : for the infant it was no slight terror.
He closes his grasp round the toghmann-it was a good auspice of brave encounter:-he keeps choking the toghain from early morn till eve.
Bodhmann comes to seek the child unwearied as any deer: when she found the toglmann strangled, Bodhmann rejoiced in the first exploit.
Speedily the toghán is skinned-it was a good augury of the chase : the skin of the tree-hound of the forest is put about him in the hunting-booth.
He is called the Lad of the Hollow, this man of straits in many a fray: until he is nine years old he continues to be fed by Bodhmann.

She goes with him to the fair of Taillte: for him this risit was not a friendly one : against the boys of all Ireland he wins three games in turn.
He plays three games of the loop (three cunning games?)-the beginning of his education in Taillte-against the youths of all Ireland: for him it was no play among friends.
Conn of the champions asks-the man by whom hard marches are made-_' Who is the little fionn (fair lad) that wins the goal against the handsome youths of Ireland?'
'A light word is that,' said Bodhmann, 'thou Conn of the brave encounters: yon lad is the man of joy, "Fionn" himself, clear-topped Ua Baoisgne.
' He is the prophesied of old, that has come to you from the hunting booth: he it is that will break your geasa: henceforth he will not be in hiding.'
He goes from the fair, pursued by many a sword-edge from Taillte, across Ireland without stop to the shelter of Fiodh Gaibhle.
He was fated not to be christened till he should see brave Conn : it is by the words of his enemy that he got the invention of his name.
That is why he was christened (Fionn): good were his knightship and his deeds: how hard he found it whoso shall tell, it is meet co write his tale.

Write it, Brogan.

The Shield of Fionn.

Ah me! thou shield of my bright king, 'tis hard that thou shouldst be defaced: woe that thy sturdy lord no longer lives, thou foreguard of the shields of Ireland.
Many a spoiling, many a brave battle thou and thy lord have given: good was the cover of thy chalk round spearheads, thou staunch protection against strokes.

There was not on the firm earth in the time when he possessed thee, there seized not shield a braver man than thy chieftain and thy lord.
He was a poet, a man of science, a battle-hero of assemblies : none was found like him for gifts: he was a brave warrior in stern battles.
He was a craftsman, an excellent metal-wright, a happy ready judge : woe to him that met him in anger: he was a master in every free craft.
Hardly is there on solid earth, unless there be some seer or sage, thou shield of the king of frosty Sígear, one that knows thy career.
Scarce are they too on the same earth, man or woman, that can tell the reason why thy name abroad is called the Dripping Ancient Hazel.
There is not, except myself and Caoilte, man of wisdom, and Fionntan of Dún Fearta, one that knows thy career.
From of old the shield of my king-I tell you it is a true matteris unknown of men, grieves me no man, until the great battle of Magh Tuireadh.
'Twas Balor that besought Lugh a short time before his beheading : 'Set my head on thy own comely head and earn my blessing.

- The triumph and the terror that the men of Inis Fail found in me, well I wish that henceforth they may be found in my daughter's son.'
That blessing nevertheless Lugh Longarm did not earn: he set the head above an eastern wave in a fork of hazel before his face.
A poisonous milk drips down out of that tree of strong hardness : through the drip of the bane of no slight stress, the tree splits right in two.
For the space of fifty full years the hazel remained unfelled, but ever bore a cause of tears, being an abode of vultures and ravens.
Manannán of the round eye went to the wilderness of the Whitehazel Mountain, where he saw a leafless tree among the trees that vied in beauty.

Manannán sets workmen at work on this tree without slackness : to dig it out of the firm earth: this were a mighty deed.
A poisonous vapour rises up incessantly from the root of that tree until it killed-perilous consequence-nine men of the working folk.
It killed nine others of them of the people of smooth Manannánthe story of the tree well I wot-and blinded a third nine.
Now I say to you, let the prophecy be sought out: around that mighty hazel uncontemned was found the source of many an 'ah me!'
Lucra was the wright that wrought the plaited blossom-light shield-lord of the Marannmháls of the plain-for Manamán the warrior.
Two virtues of the virtues of the shield, to be untouched in battle or in fray-few were the shields its equal-before it 'twas a rush of utter rout.
A battle in Pict-land that was not weak was the first battle fought by thee, when Mothla son of Meilge was slain, the mighty highking of Egypt.
Not inferior was the next battle fought by thee, whereof the grief was great, when Dubhthach son of Daire was slain, the mighty high-king of Spain.
'Twas a quest on which noble Manannán went into Asia with a numerous host, when he slew Fiodhabhlach the active, the many-weaponed high-king of Asia.
These were noble Manannán's share in thy struggles south and north, till he gave thee, that wert a beloved goodly screen, a marriage-gift to the king of Sigear.
Cairbre made a song of praise on the beauty-scarlet shield-a man of sweetness and delight was he-for the king of the noble island of Sigear.
Fifty ounces of the pure gold Gola gave him for his praising: the better was his worth and the greater his fame, both his and the beauty-clear shield's.
Cairbre the generous prince, son of Eadaoin, whose honour was good, bestowed the shield on the brave lord on whom it brought no sorrow, on the Daghdha of majestic face.

The Daghdha gave to tall Eitheor the hue-ruddy brown-red shield-to the rod of many a feat in fight, to the son of Comn son of Cearmaid.
It was from that shield that Eitheor of smooth brown face was called "Son of Hazel" -the man of deeds whereof the fame was not feeble-for this was the hazel that he worshipped.
On the day when Mac Cuill was slain in the battle of Taillte of the great muster, a man whose heavy slaughters abroad were not slight, Sgorán possessed that shield.
For the space of two hundred full years was the golden ancient shield, after a still longer life, in the possession of the lings of Fir Menia (Armenia ?).
Manannán of the heroes went after it into the country of Fir Menia, where he gained nine glorious battles orer the people of shield-bright Sgorán.
He killed three brave battalions of the splendid oversea army: it was a great affair beyond despite, whereof arose cause for cries of 'ah me!'
Fifty ounces of the red gold, fifty horses of waring mane, brownred, a [chess] board that was not shaky (?) in his house, and the chessmen of shield-bright Sgorán [were paid by him].
He gave him a still greater ransom-for Manannán it was no distress-for giving battle with the fifty battalions, thrice fifty shields along with that same shield.
Manannán himself kept it, the much-adorned terrific shield: the cunning man of never feeble deed kept it till Tadhg, son of Nuadha came.
Manannán gave to Tadhg the hue-ruddy, brown-red shield, to Nuadha's son the well-knit craftsman, together with the chessmen.
The day that comely Cumhall carried off Muirn of the lovely neck by force, the lord of every manly honour, he obtained the shield of onsets.
When comely Cumball fell in Cnucha above Liffey of the Leinstermen, the smooth steady prince of no small frame, Criomhall obtained that shield.

When Fionn the manly succeeded (?) to handsome, splendid Criomhall, that bright great grasp to which each battle yielded took from Tréanmhór the stout shield.
What of battles were fought by thee under Cumhall's son of the bright hands, thou brightest shield that hast not been defamed, 'twere hard to number them.
By thee was given the battle of Ceann Cluig, when Dubhthach, son of Dubh, was slain : the battle of Móin Mafaidh without woe, when Déidgheal hard-mouth was slain.
The battle of Luachair, the battle of Ceann Aise, and the battle of Inbhear Dubhghlaise, the battle of Teathbha, stiff was its entanglement, the battle of Cluain Meann of Muirisg.
The battle of Lusga, the battle of Ceann Claire, and the battle of Dún Maighe, the battle of Sliabh Fuaid, whose heat was tense, the rout in which fell rough grey-eyed Garbhán.
The battle of Fiomntráigh, whereby the warsprite was sated, where blood and booty were left behind, two bloody battles round Ath Móna, and eke the battle of Cronnmhóin.
The battle of Bolgraighe of great deeds, in which fell Cormac the exact, the battle of Achad Abhla that was not slack, the battle of Gabhair, the battle of the Sheaves.
The battle of Ollarbha, where the strife was fierce, wherein generous Fathadh was slain, the battle of Eise, great were its deeds, and the battle of Ceis Corainn.
The battle of Carraig, the battle of Srubh Brain, and the battle of Beann Eadair, the battle of Sliabh Uighe that was not slack, and the battle of Magh Málann.
The battle of the brave Colamhnaigh, and the battle of Inbhear Bádhna, the battle of Ath Modhairn, clear to us, and the battle of Beirge above Boyne.
The battle of Magh Adhair not belittled, and the battle of Dún Fraochan, the battle of Meilge of the mighty struggle, that caused loud cries and wails of woe.
The battle of Beirbhe, great was its deed, the after-battle with the King of Lochlainn of the ships, the battle of Uighe, undoubtful were its tidings, and the battle of the Isle of Gaibiel.

The battle of Móin, the battle of Ceann Tíre, and the fortunate battle of Islay; the battle of the Saxons, great was its glory, and the battle of sturdy Dún Binne.
The battle where tall Aichil was slain, the ready-handed high-king of Denmark, the battle of Inbhear Buille in truth, and the battle of fierce firm Buinne.
Twenty battles and twelve outside of Ireland in full sooth as far as Tír na n-Dionn of fame not small, Fionn fought of battles with thee.
Eight battles in Leinster of the blades thou and thy side-slender lord fought: in thy space of grace, no falsehood is this, sixteen battles in Ulster.
Thirty battles without reproach thou gavest in Munster of MacCon -it is no lie but sooth-and twelve battles in Connacht.
Twenty-five victorious battles were fought by thee, thou hardy door, eighteen battles, a rout that was not slack, thou didst gain over the Tuatha De Danann.
Not reckoning thy fierce indoor fights and thy duels of hard swords, these while thy success lasted strong were thy share of the battles of Ireland.
Broken is my heart in my body: I have mourned for many a good equal : thou undefended on the plain, burned by the swineherd.
Thrice nine were we on Druim Deilg after the blood-red battle: sad to relate was our plight: we raised three cries of " ochán."
Since the forbidden tree that was in Paradise on account of which, alas! transgression was done, never was shaped tree on ground that caused more cries of uchinn.
The King of Heaven save me, the good Son of Mary maiden, from Hell of sharpest peril that has caused laments and uchions.

XVII.

Caollte's Urn.

Caoilte's urn who first found, I shall record here in lasting life : for many a day it was sought in the spring above Duibheochair.
Steady the little white urn that ye have given unto my hand: my dear heart makes welcome for the goblet of Caoilte of friendship.
Ivory and gold and blue glass (whosoever has sought to know of me), pale bronze and white silver was the urn of Caoilte, the princely youth.
An apple of red gold in its middle, with pillars of white silver : on its right side when this was set, it let forth water from the urn.
When on its right side was put the ingenious shapely apple, the little white apple would stay in the water till the urn was full.
To put water in the middle of it (I tell you the matter is certain), what drink he chose thereafter it gave to every king-féinnidh.
Dear was he to whom it used to be served, the urn of Caoilte of the swift shooting : never served draught its better in shape and invention.
My witness for Ronan's courteous scion above any man that was in the Fian : that never came on land or wave a man like accurate Caoilte.
He was a soldier, a guide at need, a burgher that entertained all men, a brave man that carried the battle, a man constant and right proved.
Were it shapen gold and stones, and that my prince had their bestowal, this is the speech he would speak thereunto-that they should serve all men else.
I will clasp to my sad heart the lovely, clear, cool urn : ah! that it were my beloved Caoilte that had come here as thou hast come.

Stay with me for the dear God's sake, thou Tailgheann, thou foretold one, till I tell thee while I live the true story of the urn.
One day that we were above Eas Ruaidh, all the Fiana of Fionn at once, Fionn divided (he was the better of it) the forests, woods, and wildernesses.
Fionnchadh and Corr the Footswift without fault got the hunting of the Connacht border, and Suanân, son of Fear Trom, Faolân, and Lughaidh from Leitrim.
The three kings of the Briton Fians successful, Anluan, Forann, Fearadhach: beloved band, lively their action, the three sons of the high-king Iobhar.
The constant Glasannraidh and Giollannraidh follow Forann from us like the rest : the King of Britain's active son took a third of our foreigners and our levies.
When Fionn saw this, before I spoke he speaks to me: ' Oisin, bring along with thee together Cnû Deireoil and Daighre.

- Hold the chase of Leinster of sword-blades, of Ossory and of Sliabh Cualann : bring the sons of Cuân likewise, bring my musicians and my soldiers.
'Thou art first of us in honour, Oisin of noble virtue: thine most fitly, therefore, are the foreigners and levies under thy protection.'
His own musicians without sadness Forann brought with him to the chase, Suanach, Seanach, Breasal the fair, Uallach, Aichear, Ailgeanân.
Cobhthach, Ciothruaidh and Cos, Maine and famous Eanna, Crônân, Crinne of gentle way, Ceolach, Faoidh and Fosgadh.
We fell jealous of him then, of the son of Britain's valiant king: we envied him all that he brought away, foreigners, musicians, levies.
At Bearnas next sat down Fionn to whom we had given lordship: he looses from him the hunting folk with their red-pawed hounds.
Eight men in the king's company, men whose might was not withstood : himself was the ninth man, Fionn, son of Cumhall of the round spears.

Cuân and Aodh Beag, son of Fionn, Failbhe and Rionnolbh of keenness, Glas, son of Eadar, fierce his power, Caoinche, Daire, and Donnghus.
A hound in the leash of every man of these, Fionn with Bran before him : hearken to me in due order till I tell their names.
Fuilteach with Aodh Beag, son of Fionn, Eachtach with Rionnolbh the Keen, Fear Glinne with Failbhe, too, and Gaoth with Cuân of Crumlin.
Eitioll with Glas, fierce his terror, Fiambach the hound of excellent Caoinche, Fear Glonn with Daire for his day, Fear Baoth in the hand of Donnghus.
Bran though a hound was yet no hound, good was her valour, fair her fame, she was no hound's offspring, from no hound sprang, and no hunting dog's offspring was her mother.
Bran never mated with a hound (good were her wit and her reason -it were not meet to tell it in his time), but with the king's son of Dâl n-Araidhe.
They are following us on the height: the sword-edge fierce Fianprince sees approach him a great pig, horrid, hideous, ungentle.
Thus came the hog: comparable was he to every evil : a mountain height was not bigger than he, his colour purplish and brindled black.
Those eight slip their hounds at the fearful wild hog; the hog turns ('twas a deft deed) and kills them all on the spot.
The fierce excelling eight are enraged after the killing of the redheaded hounds, and they cast each man his spear at the fearful wild hog.
Their weapons glanced off him as if he were a pillar of stone : he turns and utterly demolishes the eight yellow-grained spears.
' Now is the time for the great speeches thou holdest with Bran at the drinking: thou hast said that never paced the plain deer or hog she would not overcome.'
'Hard to contend with fierce wizardry : it is confusion to wit and reason : full sure I am, if it were to give battle, that Bran will be the uppermost.'

Up rises Fionn and takes Bran and shakes the chain and recites to her her exploits and her triumphs during ber day.
'Bigger than yonder boar,' quoth Fionn, 'was the boar thou slewest in the glen when he fell along with thee between Eabha and Ros Geidhe.
'Though courageous was the boar of Druim an Eoin, swiftly thou broughtest him down in his despite : the boar of Magh Glinne of mighty tramp, the boar of Fionnabhair, the boar of Fionncharn.

- The boar of Riogh-choill a deed laid low, the boar of Boirche, the boar of Ros na Ríogh, the boar of Ceann Feabhrat, the boar of Fuire, the nine boars of the cave of Sgannlaidhe.
'Thou slewest a boar at Ath Nêid that had terrified the Fian, a boar from Sliabh Cuillinn over sea, and the boar of Druim Lighean.
- Thou slewest a boar at Ath Lôich and nine boars at Ath Crôich, the boar of Cnâmh-choill, the boar of Clochar, and the boar of Druim os Bothaibh.
' Recount thy [deeds of] prowess and spirit, greater is their number than their fewness, since first hound-leash was put on thee until the day wherein thou art to-night.'
Up rises Bran, stout was her start, and she shakes all the hillside: over the mountain flies the boar, when he sees Bran approach him.

Long the pursuit, from Bearnas Mór to Sliabh Teichid, where hosts were hewn, till at length fierce Bran brings to bay the boar by which the great damage had been done.
The pig utters a screech at her till it was heard from him throughout the glen : on the hill to meet them came a hideous, ungentle churl.
Thereupon said the churl of the hill: 'Let ye go my pig to me: do not all of you lose your lives for the sake of one pig's life.'
Failbhe son of Flann heard him, and Caoinche, man of sharing : heard him Rionnolbh clean and bright, and Cuân of Crumlin.

L'p come the fierce excelling four to the churl conspicuous and towering: but that druidry warded him, rueful for him had been their coming.
Thereafter they come blow to blow for a third of the long night, till he bound the four men with the thongs (?) of his shield in the affray.
Aodh son of Fionn heard that, and Glas of the deft warriorship, Daire of activity heard it and the good hero Donnghus.
Up come these four against the churl that was right swift : no less was their encounter for a whole third of the night.
The haughty churl binds the eight warriors of high achievement: reduces (?) now to straits the men and lays them on the slope.
Fionn and Bran and the boar from ravine to ravine and from hill to hill : they could make nought of him : no weapon pierced him, no fire burned him.
The churl takes him by the back and sets him on his shoulder : nothing was left for Fionn or Bran but to gaze after him.
'Spell and fate and (ill) outcome on thee unless thou follow thy boar: faintness makes poor hunting, Fionn son of weapon-red Cumball.
'Thou shalt be under spells in the Fian unless thou follow thy orn boar: Bran of victory shall be under spells, the handsome hound of many virtues.'
' I would go with thee,' said Fionn, 'if I were to get terms thereby : if thou wouldst release to me at once my eight heroes to accompany me.'
'Thou shalt have that and a blessing too, son of battle-armed Cumhall : one more request thou shalt obtain, and it will be no journey of [ ].'
The haughty churl releases the eight warriors of excellence, and they go with him then to the sith above Gleann Deichid.
As they reached the door, he took from behind a wand of might, gave a stroke to the fortunate boar, which became a young stripling of great beauty.
Thereupon they went into the sith, they met welcome without enmity, they were arranged seated on the crystalline bench.

Fifty young lads came into them to offer kisses: followed these with thousands of charms fifty noble ringleted damsels.
Thrice fifty green-cloaked women in the house in great pride: each woman of them sat without restraint beside her wellmatched mate.
A lovely queen in the further end of the house, most beautiful of the human race, offers welcome to the king, to Cumhall's son from Almha.
They are nobly refreshed from seven urns of white silver, and an urn of golden ornament for Fionn son of Cumball son of Trêanmhôr.
The new of each meat, the old of each drink was served to the people of the house: they had noble music and pleasantness of discourse likewise.
When their ale had taken them all, it was then that the warrior said, 'What now is in thy thoughts, son of Cumball from Almhain?'
'This is what is in my mind,' said Fionn, 'since thou hast joined speech with me,-who are ye, high-minded people, that surpass every household?'
'Eanna son of Labhar Tuinne is my name,' said the fiery hero: - Craoibhfinn is my lovely wife without grief, the beautiful daughter of Manannân.
The number exactly of our children is one daughter and one son ; Uathach the name of the bright-complexioned son, and Sgâthach the daughter's name.'
'The one of them that is known to us, his aspect is comparable to a king's : if we saw the noble girl, we could give her description.'
Then was brought in Sgâthach the beautiful of many charms who excelled in form and elegance the women of the surface-yellow earth.
Love of her filled (it was no mild usage) Fionn son of Cumhall, son of Trêanmhôr : he offers two hundred cattle of each kind, to wed her for a year without danger.
He offers to her brother of pride a shield and a sword of hard strength : he offers as her marriage-price a hundred ounces of burnished (?) gold.
'How likest thou that ?' said her father to the fair bright one wellendued: 'though a wife is good, it is not best to seek her hand in her despite.'

- Though it be not a husband meet for me, though a hound-steward of hounds should ask for me, I will not be against you, so that heavy disfavour may not come on me.'
They set by the king's shoulder the maiden, full gentle Luchar: she takes bond for her marriage-gift thereupon from Cumhall's son from Almha.
'Since thou art now our son-in-law,' said Eanna of the harps of music: 'that is why we have wiled thee hither to visit our people.
' My son is the heavy boar that played distress on you: I myself the guarding (?) giant that bound you straitly.
'Since I have got the better of you without strength of shields or blades, ye shall have compensation therefor of gold and silver and valuables.
' Yonder eight of the Fians of Fâl, there shall go as honour-price to them two cumhals of gold for each man of them and four for the high-king.
'Take with you the eight hilts of swords of red gold that have been fitted (?) : your handsome hounds shall be repaid, and your slender-shapen spears.
'Take with thee too my chessmen, Fionn, take my shield, it is gold to the point, take my famed ring of red gold, worth a hundred [cattle ?] each stone of its stones.
'Take my urn, it is a host's treasure, Fionn, son of weapon-stalwart Cumhall : of ivory and gold and silver it is, blue crystal and pale bronze.
'Take with thee the ornate urn, son of battle-winning Cumhall: besides seven rings without fault, that the better may be thy departure.
' Give me sureties for it, the surety of man to man, should my son enter the Fian, that they will all be obedient to him.'
They gave sureties thereupon to Eanân that night, and took sureties without defect that he should assist them with aids of power.

They spread the splendid couch : Fionn is the first to approach it: Sgâthach asks as he goes a loan of the musician's harp.
That lovely harp of the three strings, though such it was, enough was their number, a string of silver, a string of bright brass, and a string of iron whole.
The names of the strings that were not heavy, Geantarghléas, great Goltarghléas, Suantarghléas the third fitting, whereat all made mournfulness.
If the deft goltarghléas were played for the kings of the melodious world, all that might hear, though sorrowless, would feel a lasting sorrow.
If the clear geantarghléas were played for the grave kings of the earth, all that might hear without contempt would be for ever laughing.
If the full suantarghléas were played for the kings of the bright world, all that might hear (a wondrous way) would fall into a lasting sleep.
The seerlike maiden played the suantarghléas as was wont, till she cast into slumbrous sleep Fionn son of Cumhall of the comely host.
All are cast into deep sleep, Bran and the eight warriors: until midday (wondrous way) they were in a heavy sleep.
When sun rose over woodland (to them it was a great joy), there they were at Bearnas, though they had less desired to be in heaven.
Each man of them had his own hound and his fair bloom-smooth spear : they had the gold and the silver (meed of valour), the treasures and the urn.
Thereafter assemble the Fian, both from the east and from the west, till Fionn told them without restraint how he was a night away from them.
'Say not thou so, O king, son of Cumhall of comely hue: we are but since morning at the chase away from thee, gore-red spoiltaker.'
Fionn relates the story and the regret that had been brought on him: Fionn gave a telling token, the treasures and the urn.

It made Fionn much confused in mind, how he had been parted from his host : how a night and a day bad been formed out of the fleeting fragment of one day.
This time was one of the times when Fionn believed in the King of the stars, until he went over the ancient brine, the king of companies and goodly men.
Fionn divided the seven rings among seven women beauteous enow, Eadaoin, Aoife, fair of body, Aillbhe, resplendent right comely.
He gare to me the ring of gold that was worth a hundred cattle of each lawful kind, the chessmen to Osgar of fame, and to Caoilte the urn.
For seven years upright Caoilte kept it, the lovely urn of smooth gold, until the cause befell whereby it has been found above Duibheochair.
One day we were at Duibheochair, I and Fionn of highest designs, Oscar, son of Cruimcheann, that loved me, Guaire the keeper of the urns.
Guaire asked a drink of water of Caoilte who was good of understanding: Guaire takes the unblemished urn and goes with it in search of a spring.
He finds a spring, good was its sheen, at the hill to our western side: it pleased him (a thing of noble beauty) the full-flowing liquid-cool fountain.
Guaire son of Neachtan put the urn forth towards the stream, down from him into the utter depth fell the lovely, clear, cool urn.
Five searchers and a hundred (it is no lie) were searching for it, yet all of them could not find since that day Caoilte's urn.
Then said Fionn himself to the hosts with good sense, ' It will not be found, I think, from this day till the Tailgheann comes.
'The Tailgheann will come over sea, it will be a boon to the Gaedhil, he will take Ireland out of her bondage, and he will bless the fountain.
'As he is blessing the perfect stream, Patrick, son of Calpurn, with his hand, an untamed glorious salmon will come and will fetch up the urn.

- White croziers will be made resplendent, and bells and ceolans and gospels of writing, with the gold and silver of the urn.'
These are my tidings for thee, Patrick, king of the congregation : my enrichment comes not of it when I behold Caoilte's urn.

The Daughter of Diarmaid.

Eachtach, daughter of Diarmaid, ruddy her cheek, white her neck : under no borrowed indebtedness was the bright daughter of Grâinne.
Blue-eyed noble-active Grâinne, sweetheart of tooth-white Diarmaid, daughter of side-slim Eithne and of Cormac, son of Art the Lonely.
The gentle dark-browed girl is given as wife to great Fionn son of Muirn : the maiden steals away unperceived from him with Diarmaid Ó Duibhne.
Seven years were this Diarmaid and Grâinne in the outer bounds of Banbla, with Fionn seeking for them, though he got no opportunity to slay them.
Since he could not find to wound-rend him Donn's good son of the sword-edge feats, he makes peace all guilefully: 'tis thence his life came to an end.
Fiomn very quickly sent Diarmaid to make a hunting: (it is not meet for constant telling) it was a chase of deceit.
He wounded Gulban sharp of tusk, a pig of venom that was in [Beann] Gulban: woe worth who went on the stout chase when Diarmaid Ó Duibhne fell.
From that pig was named high Beann Ghulban of the esker, or it was from Gulban rugged-head, daughter of great Starn, son of Neimbeadh.
A messenger goes in urgent haste with those tidings that were tidings of woe: not joyfully was told her father's death-tale to the girl.

Out starts the spirit of womanhood that dwelt in the athletic fairbright maid: into her comes a quick spirit of manhood when she hears the tidings.
Eachtach, raging, sends for her brothers: they come quickly, haughtily (?) at rising time on the morrow.
The deed-vaunting band come together to make a devastation : it was a devastation of mighty fame, what they had slain by evening.
For three days and full nights the spoiling of the Táin had not been greater: none to surpass them come after them till doomsday.
Around the stronghold of Daolghus, Fionn came upon them by fortune: it was much work for one battalion to match her and her fian-brothers.
Four full great battalions had Fionn to guard the stronghold: the right valiant princess goes to fire the close clear fort.
She lays a siege of glowing fireballs to every quarter of the mighty burg: and she fires the fort of Daolghus in spite of the four strong battalions.
Noble-clear Eachtach and her band of brothers kept burning and swiftly slaying till rising time on the morrow.
Eachtach the high-gloried issues a challenge to duel to Fionn son of Cumball: there was not found in the victorious battalion a man to face or to withstand her.
Single combat from magnanimous Fionn Eachtach demands, though it was overweening: her fierce household were not satisfied with any other man but the high king.
Fiom the fian-prince answers unto the furious nimble fray: rent was his battle-gear by the music of her round spears.
She gave him three stout strokes over the Dripping Ancient Hazel ; she made a gaping sieve of the famous brass-barred shield.
She bared the slashing blade that was more dazzling than a lantern: Daolghus comes with ready speed between Fionn and the golden blade.
When Eachtach's golden blade touched the son of Caol of the swordeugge feats, it hewed him down with its strong stroke till it made of him two Daolghuses.

The blue keen-active blade pierces with ease through the shield of Fionn, and cuts three strong ribs in the chest of the hero.
He gave a groan of overmatching, Fionn Ua Baoiscne though a man of blood; from him fell in a mighty crash the drizzling Dripping Ancient Hazel.
'Tis then that the warrior was in lamentable case at the hands of the active woman : he seemed no bigger than a balf-grown boy in the shelter of his shield in the fray.
To look at Fionn in that strait the sons of Baoiscne could not bear : to his relief for the first men came Oisin and Caoilte.
To the relief of his lord goes Lodhorn bold and handsome: slays the high-couraged maiden with triumph of exultation and achievement.
They take up blade-lustrous Fionn on shafts of spears on high : to Lughaidh son of Aonghus, to the leech that was fierce enow.
Fionn was seven half-years a curing that he got no wholeness, coming never among the goodly fiana from the beautiful house of Lughaidh.
The last of Diarmaid's race, dear were the wound-dealing company, fair nobly tender rods, Donnchadh, Eochaidh, Aodh and Eachtach.
Blue-eyed Grâinne did not bear to Donn's son of the sword-edge feats but one daughter that grew up, and that one was Eachtach.
Son of Dui, good cleric, godly charitable heart, is it not in the middle of thy chapel that tomb stands beneath which is Eachtach?

Lament for the Fiana.
This night 'tis an utter end of the Fiana: the power of their heroes has forsaken them; few to-night their hounds and their men : 'twere easy to number them.
Not this was the number of our host in Ceann Cluith when lips were whitened: four score hundred without fault we went to Doire Dá Lon.

Our array-a festival of valour-going to the blackberry-brake of Loch Lurgan, thirty hundred that talked brave deeds was our loss at eventide.
Our loss in the battle of Gabhair, thirty hundred of valiant hundreds : our muster when we came out of it was twenty hundred ringleted fian-men.
In the battle of Ollarbha, without deceit, there Ireland's monarch fell: where Fionn fell through Goll's daughter was in the Bregian battle above the Boyne.
Last night we went to Magh Deilge, sixteen hundred in an hour of wrath : to-night there live not of those but six and thrice nine men.
Not alike to-night (alas!) are my following and my king's : innumerable after hard battle were the people of weapon-strong Cumhall's son.
Wheresoever we shall be to-night, our encampment will not be numerous: we might be counted as we sit, both hound and man.
It grieves me that thou art so, Caoilte of great valour, that thou art without fierce warriors after battle and combat.
'Tis this that makes me so, Oisín, my faultless son, that manly Fionn no longer lives, my chieftain and my lord.
The Gray Man's three sons live no more, nor Aodh Rinn in the shelter of his shield : the Red Spears are no more: the Onewright's sons are no more.
Fionn son of Dubhân, my friend of the race of Murchadh, is no more : from Gabhair's perilous battle comes not Dubhan son of Cas, son of Cannân.
That famous pair are no more, Cas of Cuailnge and Goll of Gulba, Mac Ua Neachta from beyond is no more, Fionn son of Seastân is no more.
Céadach, man of delight, is no more: Iodhlann son of Iodhlaoch is no more: Flann the eloquent hero is no more : the three sons of Criomhall are no more.
The faultless Green Fian is no more: the Fiana of Britain are no more : Daighre the bright lad is no more : more missed by me than any man.

The war-like House of Morna are no more: alas that they were not on one side [with us]: Goll, Art, Conân, faultless Garaidh, beloved lively band of foes.
Sgiath-bhreac and Banbh Sionna both no longer raise the shout: Coinnsgleo of fame is no more, the Fuath of Calraighe is no more.
Fionn's offspring are no more, Oisin of admirable warrior-skill : they have gone from the bright world all but thyself alone.
Even thy own children are no more, Oisin of great beauty: Fear Logha and Oisin without fault, Eachtach, Uladhach, Oscar.
The House of ready Ronân is no more, my kinsmen and my own sons: their muster for battle was twenty hundred shields of one colour.
O Caoilte of the many groans, no warrior lives that has not suffered woe: an ebb comes to every princedom, no world-good is lasting.
The great concourse is no more, that we once had in our mustering : nevertheless, let us behave bravely, since they come not to our aid.
A prophecy that Fionn made, on Sambain's eve in the Yew Glen, that the faultless Fian should depart, and that it should be an end of us to-night.

To-night it is an utter end.

The Sword of Oscar.

Sword of the bell-ringing clerkling, many are they that were thine enemy, and off whom thou smotest their heads and parted them from their bodies.
The first man whose head thou didst take off was sturdy Crithir son of Dubh Greann: Minelus justly passed thee (?) to the hand of Saturn son of Pallor.
Ruin the sword hath wrought: to many it has brought a tragic death: man never had a bard blade that played more havoc on good armies.

Thy first name was the Swoop of Battle in the hand of ruling Saturn: many battles were given with thy edges, thou blue and clean-edged sword.
Thou slewest Sadhorn son of Luan, by the hand of victorious Saturn the Great, and his five sons, a famous smashing: 0 Sword, great were the spoils.
Thou slewest, O Swoop of Battle, by the hand of ruling Saturn, in the battle of keen Magh Glinne, Grinne and Dearg, and Deighrinn.
Thou slewest another haughty pair-what nation but deemed it grievous?-on the mountain of Tiris, it is no falsehood, Ilis and Iacobo.
Jove stole thee from his father, thou sword that wast strong in encounter, until he earned thee hardily on Sliabh Dosaigh of brown sloe-trees.
When he had got the Swoop of Battle, Jove, son of the high prince, thereafter he could not endure until he and his father gave battle.
Dardan, son of Jove, who was fierce, it was he that brought the sword over rampant, and his mother Electra : it was a glorious adventure.
When he had gotten the Swoop of Battle, Dardan, son of the high prince, Dardan slew on the plain Sardan the brown, his sword's destruction.
Sardan of offispring had one son, he was noble, he was handsome, his march was loud above the tribes, whose name was Gola Gallamhail.
Gola went for his judgment to Dardan, who was on a foray: and came to terms with him, though it was a mighty achievement, so that they made a marriage alliance.
Gola gave his daughter as wife to Dardan of brightest aspect: she was fair in form and in mind, Be Chrotha daughter of Gola.
Gola's daughter bore a son to Dardan of the white hands: the hue of blood was on his face, his name was Mana Faluis.
Mana brought the sword to Tros, it was no token of keeping silent: Tros slew with it nine thousand, and took the kingship of Troy.

Tros gave to victorious Ilus the sword by which hosts were hewn down : many battles in the east were dealt by the hand of Ilus, 0 sword.
Ilus gave the warlike blade to his worthy lawful son: with it the hosts were beheaded by the warrior Laomedon.
Laomedon, whose aim was good; he was a haughty warrior: that man, like a sea of waves, Hercules slew him with one fist.
Hercules carried off in bonds the wife of Laomedon, though dearbeloved, into Greece, the honoured warrior-he was now king of the Trojans.
The Greeks bore off across the sea Laomedon's head filled with his blood : the spoils, the arms, and the armour of the dead man unto one place.
Hercules gave to the son of the king of Greece the sword of Laomedon, it is not a lie: bestowed it on the prosperous lord whose name was Jason of many beauties.
Twenty years and two months Jason of colour kept the blade : it was a tragic tale, though a disgrace, how he was slain by the two mothers.
When he fell-it was no tender deed-Jason son of Eson the renowned, Hercules, for its love, took back the sword of Laomedon.
Hercules pitied Priam in sorrow for his father, Laomedon: he loosed the locks of his fetters, full surely he set him free.
Hercules of beauty said : 'Be not thou, Priam, as thou art : make not lament of thy fortune: Troy of Laomedon shall be built up.'
Hercules built up Troy, and gave to Priam a wife for the bettering of his promise, the daughter of the king of the great Troad.

- Were my father to remain alive, and the king of Greece, without falsehood, I deem it better than all I have seen, that I have Hecuba to wife.'
They made another resolve, the kings of the choice earth, to give his father's spoils to Priam of the tribes, together with the good sword.

Hercules brought Priam away without sorrow; he built up Troy of Laomedon: its danger was the less, free from harm, that Hercules spent a year in guarding it.
Hercules built up Troy: never was a city like it: he leaves Troy full of a host to Priam, son of Laomedon.
Hercules the warlike was slain by Priam son of Laomedon : not without requital was slain the head of the heroism of the heavy earth.
It was Alexander ruined Troy: Priam's son by his wife was he: it was a foundation of wailing and of strife when he brought Helen over sea.
It was Alexander who brought from the east the wife of Menelaus in his ships; that is how Troy was sacked, though it is a calamitous story, through one woman.
A fleet went out of the land of Greece in search of Helen through jealousy: they inflicted a slaughter of sharp battles, they ruined Troy of the heavy herds.
Fifteen hundred ships, twenty and one, it is the truth of it and not a lie, was the hosting of the Greeks over sea to sack Troy against the Trojans.
Then Priam gave the shapely sword and the standard from Saturn to Hector that his fierceness might be the greater, his spear and his sword.
Sixteen battles thrice told Hector won around Troy by this sword over the Greek army, as is told with great envy.
Never set sole on the lovely world, never told his secret to his wife, never trod the solid earth a hero like Hector son of Priam.
From the first day that Hector went into the battle of the Greeks without danger, ten hundred thousand (ten hundred warriors?) [were laid] under gravestones by the hand of Hector alone.
Hector fell by treachery in combat with weapon-red Achilles, and gave his sword in succession to Eneas son of Anchises.
Eneas left Troy, went into Italy, the king : it was no few that fell beyond the sea in Italy by the sword.

A giant in Italy there was: weapons did not find his body: Great Hero's son, without being similar, whose name was Uarghaoth (Cold Wind), weapon-bold.
To him went noble Eneas : he was the brave, liberal (?) Trojan: he slew Great Hero's son over sea: the name Uarghaoth stuck to the sword.
Two sons had Eneas of offspring : they were noble, they were handsome: a bright, smooth pair who were not surly to poets, Silvius the youthful and Ascanius.
When old age came to him, great Eneas, it is no fiction, he made bequests to his sons, for the good youths were trusty.
Eneas made division for his love, gave away his treasure to Ascanius : without weakness, it was a manly man, to valiant Silvius the sword.
Silvius, the hero, has gotten the sword whose name is Uarghaoth : energy and fury, and valour, grew full in the good lad.
Silvius sailed over sea in two hundred ships to the isle of Tor, and brought from the sad isle Be Mhilis daughter of Tola.
Then Tola's daughter bore a son to Silvius of the strong hands : Niul of Inis Tuir his name, mighty his tramp amid the blows.
And Be Mhilis gave to Niul Cold Wind that had laid hosts in clay : Daire died in his fortress over sea from his blow with the sword.
When Julius Cæsar was with Bé Bhéasair in the house of Niul, he gave a great love that was not hidden to the daughter of the king of the Green Furrows.
And Niul wedded Daire's daughter, Bé Bhéasair of great modesty, and Bé Bhéasair gave birth with fame to Julius Cæsar, high king of the world.
A beautiful daughter had Niul, Caladh, whose desires were good, bright griffin of the bountiful white hands, her lover was Lomnochtach.
Caladh went in elopement, took with her her father's sword: the lawgiving queen bestowed the sword on Lomnochtach.

* Read this last stanza before me where thou seest the cross above.

[^11]Lomnochtach-he was no faint hero-brought a woman into captivity with him from Ireland : a queen of lovely head over the sea, Fionnchaomh, daughter of good Cairbre.
Lomnochtach bore to his fortress that maiden of good disposition, and gave to the noble, gentle maid his precious things and his treasures.
Lomnochtach got secret word that Cu Chulainn was a lover of hers : he longed to slay the Hound, without lie, on account of his great wife.
He came upon a Hallow Eve to slay the host of Eamhain, to take the spoils of the Hound of Cuailnge, and to burn the Red Branch.
Lomnochtach came to the land, the hero-fierce was his power ; it was enough to meet one hero, the Ulstermen, and the men of Ireland.
It befell that three were on guard as be came by Traigh Bhaile, the Hound of the feats, Laoghaire from the pool, and Muinreamhar son of Eirrgheann.
Laoghaire fled-it was not seemly-when be saw the giant: active Muinreamhar's face changed hue as the form of one dead that hour.

- Tell, thou active Muinreamhar,' said Bricne to his brother, 'what has fairly taken away thy wits and changed thy spirit?
-The giant has made a coward of thee, Muinreamhar son of Eirrgheann : clear to me from the bones of thy head, that thou art a spear-thrower no more in Ireland.'
Muinreamhar forsook his weapons: Laoghaire went in rapid rout: no manly man was Muinreamhar nor resplendent Laoghaire.
- Why dost not thou, fierce Laoghaire, aid Cu Chulainn, when he is left alone of thedefence to fight against the giant?
' Muinreamhar, be not as thou art, for thy wife will not love thee: all men recognize how thou art: arise, shake off thy disgrace.'
Muinreamhar sailed the rude sea till he came to Dun Bolg, and brought off the treasures over the water till he reached Cu Chulainn.

Cu Chulainn divided the treasures, without having promised, among the nobles of the Ulstermen, gave them so without delay that Muinreamhar got not a whit.
The sword wherewith hosts were hewn down, Cu Chulainn gave to the son of Roech: great was its service in rude battle: to Fearghus he gave the tempered blade.
The warlike Ulstermen went to Scotland in contention, when they fought a successful battle with the handsome sons of Adhnuall.
Fearghus gave the rude stroke from his hand with the tempered blade: seven hundred falling-it was no failure-and Ibhual by the sword.
The son of Roech gave a champion's blow in the Ulstermen's battle of the many shouts, when Fearghus smote down-it was a bright feat-the three Maols of Meath.
Seventeen hundred heroes twice told, Acoll led over the great sea : the hostages of all valiant Ireland were brought to him at Thurles.
The men of all Ireland went to Tara in one band, along with Cathbhaidh clear and bright, to adopt a plan.
Cathbhaidh went aside from them to consult his knowledge of truth : 'there is not in Ireland, I wot, but one combatant that will stay him.'

- Who is that victorious one of Ireland's men, of hard encounter? by thy druidry of fame tell us truly, Cathbhaidh.'
'Is it I?' said good Conall, said Aimhirghin's renowned son: 'Is it I?' said the Hound of the feats: 'Is it I?' said Fearghus.
'Is it Cu Raoi, that never spake false? Is it Fiamhain son of Foraoi? Is it Naoise of the weapons of battle? Is it Fear Diadh son of Damban?'
' None of you encounters him, yon Acall of clear aspect: it has been foretold for him through valour, that he should be high king over you.'
' Do thon give us advice, Cathbhaidh of excellent mind : is it better that hostages go forth, or valorous energetic battle?'
' It is no shame for ye that he get hostages, ye men of Ireland, it is no hardship, seeing that the men of the pleasant world have given hostages to this one man.'
'I say,' said good Conall, said the famous son of Aimhirghin, 'the hostages of the Ulstermen shall not go forth, despite the foreigners.'
'By thy hand, good Conall, famous son of Aimhirghin, though thy hand is good in fierce battle, thou shalt not excel him in combat.
'Lightly he will let you off, if only his title of king be given : he will not rudely take any hostages, but only me and the hard sword.'
There, Patrick, thou hast it all, head of the numerous host: long they shall live when thou art in heaven, some of the stories of the hard sword.
Sixteen and a hundred years Fearghus had it, it is no lie: until the pleasant hero fell at the hands of Lughaidh, Oilill's blind man.
When Fearghus fell who was not weak, Meadhbh obtained the kingly blade, and though it was not well thought of, she gave the sword of Fearghus to Irial.
Irial went from Eambain on a visit to long-spread Lochlainn, to learn the news of Beirbhe through desire, and to see the form of his love.
The love of Conall Cearnach's son, daughter of courageous Lugaine, great her gain, she was haughty, she got for wedding-gift the hard sword.
When fierce Lughaine obtained the tempered hard sword of the combats, he gave bis name to the blade as long as it was in Lochlainn.
The good son of Tuire of the deeds slew Lughaine in combat: from the day when the man fell, his name stuck to the sword.
Often thou wast wont to feed the raven on the vigorous bodies of brave men : never was thy blow warded off, dealt by the long arm of Lughaine.
Sixteen and a hundred years it stayed in Lochlainn, it is no lie, until Eimhear Alpa arose, the handsome right spruce stripling.

A daughter Eimhear Alpa had, a handsome right clever damsel : Be Thuinne was her name, yellow-topped Breasal's queen.
The son of Breasal and Be Thuinne, his hero-stroke was never parried, whose name was Aonghus Gaoi Fuileach by whom vultures were incessantly sated.
The woman-groom of Fionn of the Fian, the Dark Groom of the Dark Mountain, though good was her nature upon a time, she was the mother of furious strife.
The Groom brought it with her over sea to Aonghus her grandfather : for the full keen blade it was not meet to go into the combat of a feigned man.
Thy stroke was never warded off in battle, in duel, or in fray : thou wast the king-blade of the universe, until a hag's head broke thee.
When it was broken in two, Aonghus of fame took a dislike to it: it was an omen of overthrow and of sighs: he gave the sword to Oscar.
Though Oscar's hand was good before, until he obtained the sword, after that it was not warded off as long as he was alive.
Six hundred heroes four times told, six score kings in battles, and twenty warriors renowned for valour, Oscar slew with the sword.
From the first battle fought by it till the great battle of Cuil Dreimhne, I have the proof of it for you that it was wont to slay gentle, pleasant men (?).
Of the first swords of the universe is the ancient whose stroke was sturdy: bless it, Patrick of the pens: that sword is Hew-thebodies.
A curse on the blacksmith's boy, shamefully he sold Hew-thebodies : a blemish, man, on thy body! thou didst ill to sell the sword.
Take that sword from thy belt, thou little clerkling that hast afflicted me: have thou done with the fierce sword and stick to thy clerkly order.
Since the blind man has been stirred, by the souls of Caoilte and Fionn, unless Maol-Chiar goes out I will quickly kill the cleric.

My heart is broken, and I blind-uch, uch ! Patrick of the pens-Maol-Chiar to have my son's sword that laid the wild man low (?).
Though populous be Ireland now, with men, women, and youths, uch! more men have been slain with this sword, thou little clerk.
Though many spoils it has taken since the day it came to Oscar, it has driven me to lament out of doors, how I have told the history of the sword.
I beseech the Lord above us that he visit not on Fionn's son what I shed of tears for you as I regard the sword.

Thou sword.

The Battle of the Sheaves.
Dig ye the bed of Oscar: many a band he heartened : though Oscar has gone from sight, many a hard spoil he used to win.
Many battalions he overthrew : many bands were under him : much he vaunted (?) of gentle women who loved the slender man of noble race.
It was thou that slewest Fraochan the quarrelsome one morning over Teamhair Fail, when he had challenged thee in the dale to single combat in Leithgleann.
It was thou that wentest, against our will, to keep trevst with Umball's daughter: only eight warriors brave in battle (?): courageous Oscar the ninth.
The Battle of the Sheaves that the Fian fought, the which is famous ever since, no better battle was ever fought in the land of Scotland or of Ireland.
One day that Fionn the Fenian prince from Formaoil was hunting merrily, he let loose his good hounds through the lands (?) of Tara.
He chanced to find on the plain a little fawn . . . that outran both men and hounds until it came to Collamair.

Caoilte's wife had on the plain a field of ripe corn : the shelter that the deer found was to make for this from afar.
Just then came from her house the daughter of haughty Barrán in her chariot on her two horses through the hunt and the chase.
She gives welcome to the king, to Cumhall's son of comely hue: she proposes to bring him with her to her house: the Fenian king did not consent.
'By thy hand we will not go with thee, youthful daughter of Barrán, till we know whether the little foot-swift antlered deer comes out.'
${ }^{5}$ It is in vain for you all to hunt the wild beast of the plain: never trod the level world hound or deer but it would leave behind.'
We were ten hundred in turn lunting and pursuing it--Caoilte's household, the active band-and we made nothing of that deer.
Then Fionn bade Aodh Beag of the ready arms to go at the field without slackness, with the Glais-fhian and the clan of Neamhnann.

- Reap ye quickly the corn for Caoilte's wife with all your might: we shall find our game thus, and it will be a help to the wife of Caoilte.'
There were twenty hundred of the Fian and ten hundred in one array reaping wheat in the plain for the wife of Caoilte of Collamair.
That is the happiest chance for a housewife that I have heard of in my day, Aodh Beag along with the Glais-fhian reaping the corn of Caoilte's wife.
Caoilte's wife in her shapely car, eastwards westwards until evening through the band of reapers, and Daighre chanting a melody plaintively for her in her car.
It was this way with the king, Fionn son of Cumball of comely hue: he had a fork of four prongs piling up the sheaves.
And great Goll son of Morna, and Art the royal heir, and rugged Conán of horrid guise, and Fionn Mór son of Cúán.
And Nodh Smala son of Smól and Dubhthach from Lethmhóin, Oisin there, and Fionn without slackness, Aodh son of Fionn and Oscar.

There were not in the reapers' band but three swords guarding us, my sword and the sword of Fionn, and the sword of Oscar of ready weapons.
Once that the high-king of the host glanced over the vast open plain, he saw approach him seven battalions under Dolor son of Trénfhlaith.
Dolor son of grave Trénfhlaith, who became high-king of Lochlann, coming with seven battalions to Bregia to win the mastery of Tara.
Then said Fionn the seer, 'Goll son of Morna, beloved, what shall we do, the valorous bands(?), shall we retreat or stand fast?'
'A man lives after his life,' said Goll the royal prince, 'and he lives not after his honour, I say full surely.'
' My help will be good for you,' said Caoilte of the comely form; 'I will fetch out all your arms through the gates of Tara.'
Ten hundred swords, ten hundred shields, were Caoilte's load, great was his worth, like the blast of a keen wind, from Tara of the swift fian.
Not a man had fallen in the battle till Caoilte of the spoils arrived bringing his burden of weapons to the steadfast, unyielding fian.
It was thou that gavest the battle, Oscar, my victorious son, thou followedst northward the rout till thou camest to the Craobhruadh.
If I had fallen there, I swear by my shield, by my helmet, that Tara had been waste at present from the fierce fight we should have made.
Alas, that I have not left Ireland of the bright land to my son, to my kinsman, yea, and the whole level world, if I might not find shelter for Oscar.
Ah, man of learning, man of learning, pity thou hast not dug the tomb (?) ; settle aright the clean stone that is under the heads of the heroes.
Lay Oscar on this southern side-it is a bitterness to my heart and body-Mac Lughach without quarrel or hatred, lay him quickly on the north side.

Rise up, my friends without fault, fix the coffin without stain, straighten its front to the wall, let the bed of our beloved be dug.

Dig ye the bed.

The Death of Goll.

Tell us, Oisin son of Fionn, and turn thy heed to us, how many fell on the hard rock round victorious Mac Morna.
There fell on the hard rock by the hand of the son of sword-hard Morna, one man, four men, and thirty hundred, fell by Goll of mighty deed.
His first stark combatant, woe! that they never returned, Dubh son of Lughaidh, it is truth, with twenty hundred mighty heroes.
Aodh and Eochaidh-sad the tale-fell by his sharp point, Dubh, son of Lughaidh of Druim Cliabh, the truly noble man was a great sorrow.
Cairbre, the ringleted, that came over sea with tiventy hundred ready spoilers, a match for a hundred in the battle, by Goll's hand the champion fell.
The three Dubhs, sons of Maol Mithigh, they came over the wide sea, fell on the rock-it was not meet-by the handsome son of Morna.
Dubh Druimneach skilled in crafts, the hewing hand-red hero, the high tower of exploits, fell by wounding sword-red Goll.
Fionn son of Fiom Bán Ua Breasail did not withstand in the combat; once he had reached Mac Morna his battle-valour availed him nought.
When Caireall's lot was come, fortunate hand that sought no homage, Fionn the chieftain went around them to beseech (?) Goll for love of Caireall.
It was a conflict of two waves of doom, Caireall and Goll the warlike, Goll and Caireall the brave, there was no respite though they were well armed.

They have out the limber blades, a fight whereof came sorrow, brave and fierce was their fight, standing apart from the sons of Morna.
Caireall stood fast upon his ground : though he stood fast, he was not joyful : neither of those two before had ever reached the same porwer.
Uch! he has left him (dead) on the rock, Goll son of Morna, though it was pitiful : for the champion it was rueful : never again comes his equal.
Flann Ruadh was let at him, while their armies were silent in shelter : it was he who cut-a fierce feat-the head off Gollterrible deed.
The brave tower of battles fell, haughty Goll, son of Morna, head of the heroes, king of the lords, the race of Morna of the broad shields.
Though many a fight was fought before by Goll Mac Morna of the companies, it was by hunger the man perished, though he had taken the spoils of hardy men.
Pleasant, 0 man, is thy tale to me, grandson of Cumball, comely man: how long had your peace been thus, tell the truth of it and make known?
A year and a half, I speak the truth, three months and twenty years, peace and pleasantness lasted between us and the highboasting tribe.
I do not fail to remember, O Cinaoth of the land of Tara, all that broke our peace at first, I remember how it happened.
We lived exchanging swords and hounds, without quarrel, without assault, interchanging chess-games in turn, with abundance of blades and breastplates.
Without malice, without high rebuke, without spite, without imputing blame, no one deceiving another, no wrath, no stubbornness.
No quarrel, no wrangle, no envy, no evil mind, no ill design, no war, no plunder, no battle, no brusqueness, no treachery.
No harm, no feud, no anger: they were peaceful at every noble craft, in one encampment, bright and pleasant, Scotland and Ireland together.

Levying tributes and hostages from the islands of the Torrian Sea: none withstood them in many achievements, in battle, in fray, or in single combat.
This was the manner of our peace with the house of Morna of the great feuds-whatsoever Fionn, no weakling, got, he gave to them with a blessing.
Each townland of forest, each wood, one-third of it without grudge, the band most brave in eastern straits, a third of the chase and of the game was theirs.
Free quarters in every third townland from Hallowmas till May in every land where they had power, every third whelp for training (?).
Every third marriageable woman in the five fifths of Ireland, every third tribute that was raised, every third blade, every third breastplate.
And the first place on every strand, what time we filled the barks, and the last place in every land in the time of a foreign war.
Goll was his two spears length behind the fians of Ireland and Scotland : at the beginning of each good battle, Morna's son was of the foremost men.
Pleasant, O man, is thy tale to me, grandson of Cumhall, comely man; who broke your peace after this, tell the trath of it and speak?
Well indeed do I remember, O Cinaoth of the land of Tara, all that first broke our peace: ill befell the event.
Every peace that we all arranged, both king's son and overking, Caireall of hundreds and Conán used to break, though it was a deep reproach.
It was Caireall that had reason, Conán that was wont to be in the wrong: their pride and their unruliness were the undoing of the Fian.
Fiomn had a great feast in Almha, 0 gentle battle-armed Cinaoth : many a king's son was there, good was their peace and their satisfaction.
It was I who rose in the great house that day to order the multitude ; at that time I was fair of face, comely in gear and in garb.

The head of the handsome host sat down, Fionn son of Cumball from Formaoil: I placed on his right hand Goll son of Morna the terrible.
Next after that in Fionn's company, Oscar at the shoulder of Goll (Iollann), and Garadh, his grip as a griffin's, beside Oscar son of Oisin.
Beside MacLughach the hero, we placed headstrong Conán: unlike in wit and sense were those two that sat together.
After that, the Fian sat down, the beautiful band with waving hair : well was the company served, without forget, without neglect of aught.
Plentiful was our silver and our gold at that banquet as we drank together: there were ten score sons of kings at that feast that was not contemptible.
As we were drinking in that mansion of the mighty hosts, the doorkeeper came in and shook the dangling chain.
Then the head of the assemblage, Fionn son of Cumball, son of Trénmhór, inquired: 'Tell rightly thy tale, why hast thou entered, doorkeeper?'
' A single man, hero-like, courteous, gentle,-if his strength is according to his size, he would seem likely, beyond doubt, to overcome a hundred in valour.
'Here are the three colours of the man : the colour of a calf's blood in his cheeks, the colour of the raven on his brown hair, his body's colour as a lamb from the river.'
'What name, what country, has the man? or in what land was he reared? is he of the men of Alba round about or of the states of Tara ?'
'A foster-son of the king of Alba of the territories, with the mark of battle on his comely shield: he has a silken cloak around him thus: a great glory is that man.'
'Let in,' said Fionn himself, 'the good son of wise Conbhrón; if it is Caireall of the dexterous arms, he is our rightful kinsman.'
After this hardy Caireall sat down in the splendid mansion : his ten hundred are placed near him at the side of the house of Almha.
As we were drinking without care in the vast mansion of the king, the sons of Morna stand up to claim their great privilege.

Here is the privilege they had, that boastful race of Morna: every bone of a deer in which there is marrow was always given to Goll.
Caireall asked without guile of MacLughach in full anger, why the round joints are given in pride to mighty Goll.
MacLughach, who was not timid, answered the question that Caireall put: the bones are the champion's portion of Goll in Fionn's house of the great assembly.
Dexterous Caireall said that never would he eat the flesh if he might not have from Goll the marrow that would be in the all-bare bone.
Caireall stayed (came to stay) in the Fian, obeying his own good foster-father, on condition that Alba should be subject to him while he himself was in fianship.
The peace of the House of Morna was kept without sorrow and without constant bitterness through Fionn becoming surety for the fulfilment of its terms without grudge.
'Certainly we will fulfil the peace in all things about which we have been at feud, yet so that Goll shall not have the bones: we will never part with them.'
Iollann (Goll) said without contempt: 'Long have I obtained the privilege of the bones: it is no good work for a foolish hasty lad to come to seize my right.'
'I tell thee, by thy hand, Iollann, though great is the dread of thee, that we will never let the bones go to thee for fear of combat.
'Since thou gavest the battle of hardy Cnucha, victorious son of Morna, thou hast the bone since then, for want of Cumhall of the hundreds.'
'Cumhall of the feats fell there by the might of my hands in the combat, and I slaughtered his host in turn : to thee I will not humble myself.'
Caireall said with no weak voice: 'It were better methinks if only Goll and Garadh and Conn had come against him in the fight.' Ete.

XXIII.

The Adventure of the Men from Sorcha.

It was a feast that Fionn made for Cormac in the great mansion of Sidh Truim : the nobles of the men of Fál came with the prince of Tara to the meeting.
The king of Alba comes, and the king of the Greeks, and the son of the king of wealthy Lochlainn on a risit to Cormac of the battles in pride and in splendour.
Iollann, verily, was the name of the king of the Greeks, Core the name of the king of Alba of many roads, Conall and Cuilleann of the ships, the two names of the sons of the king of Lochlainn.
Fionn, a prince without envy, sent an invitation to Cormac to come to the banquet given without guile to the men of Ireland.
When each had gone without deceit into the yew-brown red mansion, the king of the Greeks was placed with the king of Alba by his shoulder.
And the sons of the king of Lochlainn reproachless, fittingly at the right of that king, the man supreme in majesty and power, Cormac, son of Art, the high-king.
The king of Ulster and his following, and the king of Munster of good aspect, the king of Cruachain of active mind, sat around Cormac on that occasion.
The king of warlike Leinster sat, a generous man of perfect mirth : great was their mirth at a feast, all that were in the side-blue mansion.
Eight men and eighteen score of leaders of hosts, it is not untrue, were around the king of Ireland of the spoils, not reckoning their foreigners.
On the further side sat the worthy high-king of the fians of Ireland: great as was their display at the banquet, Fionn was a better man than all in the mansion.

At Fionn's right shoulder were set Goll son of Morna, the sons of Nemhnann, and myself, good cleric, on the left side of my father.
Oscar and Diarmaid, son of Donn, at that time by my shoulder : after these were arrayed the high nobles of our fians in the mansion.
Along with the son of active Morna were Garadh and valiant Conán : Goll and all his kin at the right hand of Fionn of Almbain.
There were thirty poets between Fionn and the fire : not a man of them but had a silken cloak from the son of Cumhall, son of Trénmhór.
The stewards who were in the house attending the rest at this time were Caireall, Fionn of the high steps, Caoinche and brown ruddy Daire.
Raighne, a man of wisdom, another good son of Fionn himself, and Caoilte, victorious man, serving the high princes for us.
The joyful hosts assume a great and clamorous mirth through drinking : we behold coming into our presence a cheerful, merry Gruagach.
His sweet-strung harp in his hand: it was more musical than organs: deftly, excellently he played it, so that our company were not displeased.
The hosts fell silent of their own accord at the tender sound of the music: the Gruagach of the harmony was then placed in a chair of gold.
A slave followed him without fear : never saw I so big a man: with a caldron on his powerful arm that would cook enough for seven hundred.
Said Fionn of brightest visage, the king who never failed at need : 'Ask thy guerdon forthwith, man : name us thy errand to the hostel.'
'To ask my caldron-full of gold from the good son of Cumhall of the hosts, and to find out who is best at bestowing of the men of Ireland.'
Muireann's good son answers that, and not by reason of having feasted, and gave his caldron-full of gold to the huge and kingly giant.

It was Fiomn's luck and fortune, when the strong man came over the ware, that Trénmhór's son had in his camp by chance a shipload of gold.
Fionn said to Caoilte : 'Go forth to pay it': Caoilte brought in of the gold of Araby its fill in the Gruagach's caldron.
The Gruagach said to Fiom : 'I find no prince thy better ; there cannot be in the east or here a king, however great, to compare with thee.'
Fionn, whose utterance was not rough, asked in a loud, clear voice of the huge man: 'Since thou hast now got thy will, thy name, thy surname, tell for us.'
'Thou shalt have the truth of my tidings, man of the mighty combats: I am Fer Dochair son of Dubh, from the bright lands, from the Sorchas.
'Fionn, the Gruagach is a son of mine, that played the music of many virtues, the man who excels in spirit and strength, is best in valour and wizardry.'
Then out spoke good Conan, who shunned no man's encounter: 'Though now though art not reckoning Fionn, he would carry the prize in all thou saidst.
' Never yet came one to compete from near or from ever so far but he would find in the household of Fionn a man to match him in Ireland.'
' My match was never yet found near or far away : nor shall there come here now one how good soever to contend with me.'
Anger seized Oscar of battle when he heard the challenge, and he wagered beyond the men of Ireland to master the fair-haired Gruagach.
Up rose the man that shook the chain, on hearing the brawl, and shook thereupon the chain of silver, that was not of bronze nor of iron.
Then valorous Fionn fell silent at the general sound of the chain, till his visage reddened like scarlet at Oscar's insult to the Gruagach.
The whole host was hushed at the blushing of Fionn of Almhain : there was not a hero of hard combat whom it did not check at once.

Cumhall's son of valour spake to the good son of wise Oisin: ' Oscar, though good be thy grace, do not insult the Gruagach.'
' By reason of the wrath that just now has come on the son of Cumhall,' said Oscar, 'unless thou master the prince of Fál, thou shalt fall in consequence of thy challenge.'
Spake the Gruagach who was not slack: 'Son of Cumhall son of Trénmhór, since to thee, Fionn, I have come, escort me safe out of Ireland.'
' Be not in dread to return, Gruagach of the waving crown of hair: thou shalt have a clear escorting from me out of the bounds of the Gaelic shore.

- Though the men of Ireland all to one man were to come against thee, I will send you safe from them till thou leave the shore of Ireland.'
'True is everything that has been told of thee, Fionn of the edgenaked arms ; aught good that was said of thee was no flattery, son of Muireann of the great feasts.'
Eight good men were sent by the high prince with the Gruagach, MacLughach and honest Caoilte and Caireall, grandson of Conbhrón.
Caol Cródha, high was his might, the three sons of the Craftsman, from the high-king were sent; the other man, fierce and readywitted, the tall Oscar son of Cromcheann.
There are the eight that Fionn sent-I have heard of no company to excel them-with great courtesy from his house to accompany the Gruagach.
Spake the Gruagach of ready speech : 'Since I am going, Oscar, if thou shouldst follow me to Sorcha, thou shalt have combat and fierce encounter.'
'I swear by my wounding weapons, by my sword and by my spear, when I hear that ye are in the east, that I will go to seek thee.'
The Gruagach departs, and the huge man, and those eight of our host, from us in a ship over the salt sea eastward; from the great haven of Benn Edair.
The unwearied crew found a wind that was always with them: for those three months' space they were encountering perils and wanderings from the course.

They took harbour in Sorcha having parted with trials : heavy was their weariness from the sea, the handsome beloved eight.
The son of great Lugh,-Caol Cródha, fierce was his awfulness, asked-'What is the land of shining hue that I see?' said the high prince's son.
Then spake the Gruagach to Caol Cródha battle-rictorious: ' This is Sorcha strong and staunch, son of Lugh of the strokes.'
' If hither was thy journey from us, from the excelling land of Ireland, go into thy country-we deem it time-and we shall go to Ireland.'
'Come ye with me for love of Fionn, ye nobles of the pleasant heroes: the delights of Sorcha shall be yours until your heary strain be relieved.'
They go promptly forth from the ship, the eight heroes much belored : the Gruagach and the huge man were at their service diligently.
They see a city in the land, various and beautiful was the colour of its side, many a free craft was followed on its outskirts.
In the dauntless fortress were a kindred many-hued, delightful, with blades of furious flames, with satin silken cloaks.
With seric cloaks of satin, with tall regal womanfolk, with seric embroidery moreover upon her cloak around each queen.
Though in many a castle I have been ere now, south and north, east and west, I have not heard of another such home nor of a people their equal.
The multitude fair of colour came forth, they made obeisance to the Gruagach, and they kissed him affectionately, youth and maiden alike.
When they reached the huge man, both womanfolk and multitude, each man promptly gave each man's kiss to the Gruagach.
${ }^{4}$ Tell, thou Gruagach of war, by whom every challenge has been sustained, who are the scanty band thou hast brought to the mansion.'
، With Cumhall's son of ruddy face, who gives no refusal nor denial, abide the eight of good service, and seven battalions in his standing fian.'

MacLughach the fortunate spake promptly to the Gruagach: 'Make known to us, O man, what are the fortress and its people.'
'Here is the hostel's name for you, for love of Fionn of Dín Modhairne, this is the City of Gold, ye folk of the son of Trénmhór's son.'
Down sat the valiant Gruagach and all his host in the hostel, and placed hospitably near him the folk of Fionn of Almhain.
Two hundred faultless men-at-arms were serving the encampments, and each brave man at the banquet had a cup embellished with gold.
When the great joyful festive host was full of mirth, a man arose in the brilliant hostel, boasting his bravery before all.
He spoke then with a haughty word standing up in the mansion: ' O pleasant company, hare ye seen the equal of this castle in Ireland ?'
'I vow, O Gruagach,' said the son of proud Criombthann, 'that Fionn for one hour of the day is better than ye all till doom.'
'All that I see in Inis Fáil, though ye think them greatly to be vaunted, better am I than all of them,' said the yellow-haired Gruagach.

- What silken stuff there is in my house, and what goblets heaped around, and what cups of golden ornament, are better than the wealth of Trénmhór's grandson.'
Up rose Caireall white of skin, and the comparison had not pleased him, seized a sword of fierce fury and two fiery spears.
Up rose MacLughach the active, and the Craftsman's three sons, Caol Cródha, brave and merry, and Oscar son of Cromeheann.
Up started Caoilte, clear of countenance, a bright man of conquering lances, a bright man comely at a feast, stalwart he was and honourable.
The victorious Gruagach took a hero's step bravely and hardily right opposite the son of Fionn's son, to stay him in the stead of combat.
A step to meet him, a stout step, took the son of Daire then: it was enough to quell the heart, the sound of their sledge-smiting.

Caoilte and Caireall were bravely hewing in the hostel, and Criombthann's son fierce in might together wounding the hosts.
Caol Crodha high in mien, the Craftsman's three handsome sons: direst exploit I have heard, two-thirds of the host engaging them.
Fifty heroes-brave was the onset-Caireall O Conbhróin slew: there fell by the Craftsman's sons thrice fifty courageous men.
Ten and fifty fierce heroes Caol Cródha cut down with his sword: this is the reckoning not slight that were wounded in the fight.
His ready sword, full of fury, in the Gruagach's lissom hand, he planted it till its hilt was bloody in the flesh of the shining heroes.
Daire's son the horrific bore fifty wounds from the quarrel : the virtues of their blades defended the heroes' bodies in the combat.
The Craftsman's dauntless sons, Cromcheann's son, and Caireall, Caoilte, and warlike Caol Cródha came around glorious MacLughach.
They carried MacLughach off, men pitiful after the fray, brought him in their ship over sea in spite of the company of comely men.
They encountered danger and peril wending westward over the brine: the courage of the men will not be known until the end of all times.
Ravens without ruth were sated from their encounter with the host, and seas incarnadined with their blood, through the wrath of the achieving eight.
They came, though it was hard for them, to Ireland despite the host: famous was their faring from the east fair into the haven of Benn Édair.
Caoilte came on to Almha, we rejoiced that he did not tarry, the six successful remained in company of MacLughach.
All they went through of furious battle since leaving yew-clad Ireland, Caoilte relates it all to his fian and to Fionn of Almhain.

We were not long thereafter, when Caoilte had come to us, till the arrival of MacLughach of the feats, and his six heroes equal in fame.
Women came in frenzy, and Almhain's young folk, wailing for fierce MacLughach-many a hero of us was mournful.
A year, as I remember and attest, were Gaoine's wounds a-curing; at the year's end he was whole, it brought joy to the Fian.

Oscar, generous man, who never withdrew a foot from death, thought of seeking battle in the eastern land, that son of redoubtable Oisin.
He obtained my leave and Fionn's to go east, though it grieved us : though great was his following, he brought with him only thrice nine men across.
The names of the three nines that were skilful I shall tell you, Patrick: though I have outlived them sorrowing, I have knowledge of their story.
One in the first place was my own son : two was wise MacLughach : Caoince and Daire son of Fiomn, four warriors full pleasant.
Raighne son of Fionn, high his valour, and the Craftsman's three sons were four, Caoilte whose speed was a murmuring sound, there are nine of them, 0 churchman.
Three good heroes of my children went, Iolach and pleasant Oisin, along with Oscar, over the brine; good was their triumph and their encounter.
Conan went thither, the Grey Man's son, fierce was his joining in engagement, and his six sons stout at arms, they were courageous to compare.
These are but eighteen men, great was their activity and their bulk : and twenty without defect therein were Eochaidh son of Fiomn and Caireall.
Breasal's son went, not weak in act: he was stout in their quarrel ; and O Duibhne brown-haired, and Fionn son of Dubhán faultless.
Legán the airy without sadness, a hero who spoke true judgments: O Patrick, brave was his might, the twenty-fourth hero.

Three others went, fierce in fray, of the race of Ronan of famous songs : Domhnall son of Caoilte the tall prinse, Colla and redhanded Labhraidh.
Gently floated up to the wharf Oscar's ship of sprightly trim : in it go prosperously to the east the three nines full sturdy.
They reached Alba of the hosts, the active crew of fierce speech, demanding rent and revenue in return for gentleness and peace.
The men of Alba come in wrath, spirited battalions of large heroes: to meet the swift warriors there was many a brigade of good men.
Oscar comes on with his little host by whom many a hard encounter was sustained : though many a lord opposed him, he gave battle to the Scotsmen.
They stormed Dún Monadh, they routed the Scotsmen: Alba's king of forays fell by manly bloodstained Oscar.
This was the battle of great Dún Monadh where many of an army fell : the worse for the power and fame thenceforth of those that died in the fray.
The men of Scotland, though great their muster, their courage and their power, submitted thereupon to Oscar, for the greatness of the spoils of his sword.
There was not on the solid land in power of battle and sturdiness of sword a leader of three nines of their men that did not pay tribute to Oscar.
He divided their own gold and wealth as an overlord's bounty among themselves: by his sword he took their hostages and by the strength of his warfare.
Thirty-five ships he brought with him southwards from Alba: they go to London of the kings, it was a great company of strife.
A ready army met them in London of the white coasts: all that were for battle in this eastern land were in the fortress to meet them.
London of the red ramparts is stormed by the company of great fury: Oscar fiercely overthrows the men of the Saxons all on one field.

Saxonland is pledged for his time to Oscar for his victory to be tributary thenceforward until the latest day.
He got thirty ships and their men with him and their provisions from London : his force on the deep sea of currents was three score ships of war.
He goes on a distant voyage from Saxonland of the great hosts to the bright haven of Rheims of the kings, it was a cause of broken peace to France.
The French assemble vauntingly : they were right ready to come against them : there was scarce a king or prince in the east that did not gather to oppose them.
[The translation here passes on to couplet 142, the intervening part, 121-141, being transposed in the text.]
They inflicted slaughter on their princes, they took their great cities, they swiftly subdued their kings and destroyed their mighty armies.
The victorious Franks are overthrown by the northern expedition of Oscar: they submitted to his peace and to the tribute of his sword.
He got their captives and their tributes-it was not a work without skill-Oscar carried off all their spoils during the battle.
They gained power over every land, Oscar's ungentle fleet ; dolorons until doom shall be all they slew unerringly.
Then they go forth from France, after all the war they had waged: they tarried not, though stern was the encounter, until they arrived in Spain.
The spoiling Spaniards came in multitudes to look on battle: many a lord good of hand was pressing on to the encounter.
They set a ring of battle around Oscar, son of the prince : a silken standard, well-wrought, of seric fabric, is hoisted for him on a lance.
They gave a stout and furious onset, the [invading] band and the Spaniards : many were the pools of blood from those that were worsted in the strife.
Fifty ringleted heroes, no over-statement, fell by Oscar's hand in the fray: one-third of all that perished by his valour till doomsday will not be remembered.

The high tribute of the Spaniards was paid at once right into his hand; hostages and revenue thereafter, and no spite against him.
From Spain to great Almain to lery tribute for his host; the mighty fleet of Banba, a strong full-valiant navy.
In Almain was assembled rapidly a concourse of warriors in hostility to guard them from being in sorrow : they rued their muster.
Oscar of the triumphant sword advanced, though it was a cause of sighs to his hosts, gave fight to their nobles of fame-it was a woe of battles to their lords.
The Allemans advance against him in anger and in awesomeness : one and twenty staunch battalions faced him in the engagement.
All their host was overthrown by Oscar of the heavy blows: the valiant king of the two Almains he slew in single combat.
The gold and treasures of the two Almains were ceded to him without protest, and a fixed tribute thenceforth, and the command of their cities.
There was not from great Almain till they came to Greece a land whose tribute wealth and booty they did not capture.
They came to Greece though far away: they suffered many pains therein : great were the hardships of the men: great their enterprises to relate.
Sing their enterprises, pleasant Oisin, until thy son returned to Ireland : excellent is the melody of thy mouth, and sweet, 0 ancient man.
Though wandersome and long to tell their active perilous expedition, I will not cease from it nevertheless till I put a finish on its end.
A Grecian muster gathers : they were numerous, hundred-fighters: there was many a coloured standard of red silk over their high nobles.
The standard of noble Oscar is set on a spear uplifted, nobly decked : he advances, sheathed in armour, a man of blood-stained strife.
Oscar with his glorious host and the Greeks come against each other: it passes count, $O$ pleasant churchman, all that the band left woeful.

They shoot forth showers of venom from their fiery ancient weapons: the unwearied bands kept smiting heads and helmets.
By the hand of warlike Oscar fell the high king of the Greeks in the encounter: the king's host thereupon the men of the fleet destroyed.
Seventeen kings of Greece he compelled to submit to tribute: bravely he won victory and spoils, the hero, weapon-keen Oscar.
When they had overcome the king of the Greeks, they go forward into India : that was the land of armies and of courts, beautiful of many excellences.
The king of India comes against him, with three score highvaunting battalions: it were difficult, 0 man, to bring tribute out of that land.
Oscar, with the furious band, comes to meet them and engage them : brighter than clouds of heaven were the lightnings of their sledge-smiting.
No man escaped to tell the tidings south or north of the stout household, but Oscar of the fierce onsets kept hewing with his hard sword.
Oscar, that refused no man aught, slew the king of India in the conflict: anger seized him through the hosts, triumphant weapon-strong Oscar.
Oscar, clear of voice, bestowed the wealth of that land on his army : he gave wages to every man of the gold of the Indians.
[Translation here returns to stanza 121.]
Seven shipfuls, without refusal, to be paid him each complete year : a great tribute from bright India was due to Osear in Ireland.
They went to free Sorcha, the company that brought sorrow into every land: a stout upstanding wood of spears: the flag o their prowess was not low.
The number then of the people of Oscar of the gilded swords was four battalions, a numerous host of good carriage and bravery.
A fierce army from Sorcha comes, terrific men, awful their guise, eighteen battalions of great power they had at the haven aided by wizardry.

They cast fires and rocks at the fleet on the sea, and a hundred snomstorms full of fury to overthrow the navy's might.
This is the number that perished there by the army of Sorcha, o churchman, four shipfuls of great strength: they were drownet all at once.
The oversea fleet comes to the shore in spite of the men : great was their power in every land, they gave battle not gently.
The men of Sorcha gave fierce battle to that company of brave endeavour: waters grew red suddenly with the lightning of swords and helmets.
Fifteen days, a fierce endurance, with none giving forward or backward, but smiting bodies and heads, the armies of Sorcha and the band.
The Gruagach, never a weakling, answers the (challenge to) duel of Oscar son of Oisin : warlike Oscar advances agrainst the encountering Gruagach.
To victorious Oscar of the steeds it was thus the Gruagach spalie: I will never cut off thy head, thou hast bravely royaged against us.
Oscar answered merrily to oremaster the dauntless Gruagach, stoutly, furiously, fieccely, angrily, engerly, risht virorously.
Two strokes successful Oscar gave the Gruagach for erery stroke: strike as he might, he drew from him no blood, but red meteors of fire.
Fearless Caireall said-well wo liked the speech-smito, famons Oscar, his blade out of the Gruagach's hand.
Active Oscar, who was not timid, accopted the adriee he got from Cairall, smote his new weapon of fury from the fair yellowhaired Gruagach.
When Oscar who was not timid hoard the roiees of his foes around him, he swifty hewed off the man's head with a heroic sword-stroke.
The Gruagach of active strength fell in the duel with ()sear, and the hage man too of erim form by his fievee formidable sword.
Oscar lept at the fight after his wimmph in the ducl-a dracon's ferat, stem was the meoting-remding skulls with his sturdy arm.

Raigine. gocil son of Ftom, slew the king of Sowels in the tray : the king s son of raliant prowess was slain by the band of Oscar.
Sorowtal trom the band of the Eeree bero was Sorela of beautiful bosts. Laving lost her people, good churchman, throwit the Gruagach's challenge.
He exacted iten eaptives and bostages ior his people: they leave courageous Sorcha in sorrow for lack of friends.
(Translation resumes at stanza 174.)
They go to great Hesperia, numerous and strong were its hosts, long lasting and potent their strength, their power and their magic.
The princes of the men assemble to do battle with his expedition: through the tops of the forests was heard the clang of their weapons and armour.
By warlike ()scar, hero that possessed every speil, is slain the king of Hesperia, sad tidings, and a thousand heroes of his great host.
Uscar. furious and fierce, was not content without the entire trilhute of Hesperia : he got their revenues thenceforward and the command of their cities.
Twelve bartalions, formidable men, there were in active Italy ; guarding their eastern land in wait for weapon-fumed Osear.
Haring sublued their country, their king and his despotic power, he carried off over the brine gold and cups out of goodly deepblue Italy.
By Usear's sword that overthrew the mighty, the king of Italy is slain at this time : two hundred sons of kings, courageous and tall, fell of the troops at the hands of his powerful host.
They cross the sea with hardship, the strong and sturdy company : they paused not from the steady course till (they reached) the hero-abounding band of Lochlainn.
Of Lochlanners hard by the haven, an active hero-muster with the cavalry, to meet the goodly band was many a champion and high prince.

Though they were brave to see and numerous, deadly in battle as they weened, a deathly visage came upon each man, fearing their death from Oscar.
A fierce onset on the furious band the numerous host of Lochlainn gare : that was indeed the renomous shower whose fiery bolts were many.
Many a vulture was screaming for those that were laid low in the stout stress, and many a raven was delighted by Oscar's victorious hand.
The King of Lochlaimn fell-though it was a calamity-a noble prosperous man of goodly fame, and his two sons of bravest prowess, by Oscar's victorious hand.
The nobles of the tribes were slain, though haughty was their spirit: the strength of Lochlainn from that out Oscar brought to his fleet.
They breach the city of Beirbhe, though splendid was its muster : its hostages, its might, its power, in a short space have to depart.
They gather the gold of the city, its treasures and its great beasts : it was a spoiling of no weak kings, their journey to the land of Lochlainn.

They went into their ships, the winners of every hard triumph : the man of high prowess adrances to the fortress of the high king of Britain (Wales).
The men of Britain were there to meet them; brave men, not slack in combat: and many a combat there was, though they had the best of numbers in the conflict.

By Oscar's strong valour fell the king of Britain of stern triumphs: ten hundred armed men not gentle fell by his hand in the great affray.
He abandoned not the eastern land, but kept waging battle and triumph till he had subdued by the strength of his blades the men of Britain all in combat.
He gave the cities of the land to furious flames: no rampart but he burned and plundered, no host whose company be did not quell.

The men of Britain though bold, by the strength of Oscar of the strokes, were left, the prince and his hosts left them, ruined and overthrown.
The pleasant company voyage to the shore-smooth land of Ireland : they come to rest and draw up at the fort of Barrach son of Úmhór.
He gives leave to all that were there to go with their booty to their people and to return to him over the sea, and to remain a while with him.
There came to meet him, to his ship, the active fians of Cumball's son: stout and sturdy were their hosts, the sturdy race of Trénmhór.
I swear to thee by my good word, though my body's vigour has departed, that Oscar brought to us the power of every land and their spoils.
There was not of the sons of Fionn, except myself, 0 Adze-head, one-and the men were noble-that did not accept Oscar's hire.
The number of the host that Oscar had, whose victory and spoils were great, not counting attendants and women, was nine thousand full-active heroes.
My son's magnificent company, though numerous were their battles and combats-he himself excelled them all in the hour of strife and conflict.
He was a senior before each brave man, in the time in which he reached his carrying of arms, his power, and his comeliness : courageous was the brave hero's onset.
That is Oscar's voyage to the east, and somewhat of the prowess of his sword : all that perished by his hand and blade till the day of doom I may not tell.
Every land he traversed eastwards of the noble territories of the world, tribute for his fear undemanded they sent him every year.
Oscar my beloved levied, after traversing each wide sea, tribute from every province for his lifetime, he obtained it after his return to Ireland.

There shall never be since Oscar, hero of many a stern triumph, there was not in the time when he was, a man his match in combats.
Believe henceforth, valiant Oisin, man that wast fierce in fray; give thy attention to the King of the elements: practise religion without malice.
Grief for my people and for Fionn has darkened my heart, 0 Adze-head: since the not weakly band is gone, henceforth my friends are few.
Oscar of fame lives not, though great were his spoils in the chase; nor Fiomn, king of the blood-stained fians, nor the hundredwounding Corr Swiftfoot.
Caoilte of prudent sense lives not, a wrathful, bloody, right noble man : nor MacLughach famed and keen, a hero for whom my spirit is gloomy.
I alone, after the destruction of the Fian, attending to hours and matins, without largesse, without foraying, without the acclaim of the grateful poets.
No feast a-holding in my house, no gold bestowed on companies, an ancient of devotion in a church, where we have neither attendance nor society.
Son of Fionn who refused no man gold or bronze, thou shalt have the house of Heaven, that is not mean, for thy heart and for thy humanity.
Make not lament, O man, son of Fionn of the numerous household; truly we shall all go, O son of the king of Almhain.
It grieves me, Patrick of the relics, who makest devotion with diligence, to be alive now after Oscar who defended all that thou hast named.
Henceforth I can but sorrow, since the sons of Trénmhór are gone: my glory and my beauty have departed, my strength, my hosts, my household.
My blessing on thee, 0 man, for thy chant all this time: may I obtain from the King of the elements thy admission with me into his royal fortress.

May mercy reach each one, and mindful repentance, who will give to memory all that has been chanted to us of the words of Oisin son of Fionn.
0 Adze-head, to whom my voice is sweet, 0 man for whom a noble chant is sung, if my valour were restored, thou shouldst be in command of the earth.
Practise devotion and prudence : many perils thou hast sustained ere now : every spear that thou hast ever cast, that great Mary's. Son may forgive it.
Dearer to me were the deep chant of the fians, and the sound of the chase on every highland, and Caoilte's musical cry, than heaven and thy joys, 0 Adze-head.
Accept faith, noble Oisin, man that wast attentive to a company, and do a pure repentance for thy smiting in battles.
If swift MacLughach lived, and sword-strong Caoilte, thou shouldst not have them in a church taking thy instruction, 0 Adze-head.
Since there lives of the fians of Fál but thou alone of mighty awe, O Oisin, who didst serve each one, believe cheerfully in the elemental God.
I beseech Heaven's High-king, who is in the angelic city, since my fierce glory has departed, not to forget me for the great feast. It was a feast.
There is for you, Captain Somhairle, and I can write no more at present from the trouble of the ague.

XXIV.

The Chase of Sliabh Truim.

A day that we were on Sliabh Truim, the fians of Fionn full of courage, many a good hero and hound were there, that were right nimble on the plain.
There was not a hero of them without a shield on the mountain and two hounds and two keen beagles around Fionn of high courage.

We were spread over every glen : stout was our strain against the hills: two by two on each slope, our might was full without fault.
We rouse above the heads of peaks the game of the glens and their boars : on all sides of us along the slope was many a doe and badger.
Numerous were heroes and hounds coming forth swiftly on the level : to hold the chase in every glen came forth Fionn, prince of the peoples.
Two hounds in each man's hand of all that came out there of the Fian : it is I myself that know well the story, though I am now bereft of sense.
I shall tell without mistake or omission some of the names of the hounds of the hosts: not a hound was loosed from its leash, but that I myself know its excellence.
O Baoisgne (Fionn) loosed swift Bran and Sgeolang that sped afar : Oisin loosed great Buadhach and young Abhlach after these.
When Bresal's son saw in front the king's hounds going brarely, he let go his two fierce hounds, Ucht Ard and slender Ferb.
Active Oscar who was not slack loosed Mac a Truim from his golden chain : famous Caol Cródha let go Léim ar Lúth the nut-brown hound.
Garaidh of the bright weapons loosed Ferán and Foghar and Maoin : Ó Duibhne dexterously slipped Eachtach of the tricks and Daoil.
MacSmóil of courage keen let go Airrchis and Rimn the fierce, shapely OO Conbhróin let go Cor Dhubh after them and Máigh.
Conan of the ready deeds loosed Rith Rod and Rith re h-Ard: Faolán, friend of hounds, let go Carragán and red Got.
Edain's son thereupon loosed good Casluath and keen Futhlamb; pleasant MacMorna let loose Arann and Ard na Ségh.
Ferdhomhon son of Fionn let go Ciarchuill that outstript every hound: MacReiche of sage counsel loosed fresh Sgath and Lúth na Lon.
Caoilte loosed brave Enfhuath, and Cuillsgeach of hardy onset: Dubhán's son, generous man, after him slipped Rian and Gar.

Ruddy Dáire son of Fionn loosed Ard na Sealga and hardy Loinn : active MacLughach loosed white Cuirthech and Lér-bhuaidh.
Aodh Beg, a ready man, loosed Marbhadh na gCat and Taom : Conan son of the Gray Man slipped Leigean from her leash and Laom.
Sgainner and fierce Gáir are let go, the two hounds of tall Iolar son of Smól: Osear son of Cromchenn who was not gloomy let go Soirbh and Nóin.
Famous Fergus File loosed without neglect Sgiamh and Faoidin : Colla son of Caoilte, generous man, he let go Rian and Laoidh.
Dáire son of Ronán loosed Dibhearg and swift Dobhrán: by us were loosed without shame the beautiful great pack of the fians.
The Craftsman's sons let go their hunting pack without saduessCor and Derg and Drithleann, Corrbhenn and Rith Teann and Treoir.
Musical Cnú Dheireoil let loose Aindeoin and Eolach on their course : Uath of the hunts, not mean of aim, loosed Sgread Ghábhaidh and Néimh.
Criomlithann of the strokes and Conn, two sons of warlike Goll, let go Dochar and Dorr, let go Crom and Gáir.
The household of the prince let loose their hounds dexterously without scarcity: behind them by reason of the chase the hillsides were full of blood.
Many were the hounds on the track of deer around us on the mountain southward : the throngs were in their wake watching them, fierce was their onset.
There was many a cry of deer and boar on the mountain, of those that fell by the chase: from the spoils of herds and hounds blood abounded on the slope.
I never thought the cries of battle more dreadful, though in many battles I had been ere then, than the cries of hounds and deer when the pack came at the herds.
No deer went east or west, nor hoar of all that were alive on the mountain, not one of them all but was killed by the good pack fierce in attack.

We killed twenty hundred deer on the mountain and ten hundred boars: our pack in the greatness of their fury left every field red with blood.
Hoes and badgers were not counted, nor hares, of all that fell on the slope : though they were not reckoned by Fionn, they were methinks a great part of our game.
The greatest prey ever killed in Banbha's land at any time, the best that was during my life, was the prey that Fionn took that day.
The prey is divided by active Goll : he left no man of them without a portion : he forgot no man of the Fian except himself and me.
I spoke to Goll the fearless, and I rued the saying of it: 'Is it spite that has caused, O Goll, me to be forgotten of all others in the division?'
' It would not beseem anyone in the Fian to revile me above all: it is a pity I am not near thee that I might test the strength of thy hands.'
To answer him I seize my sword, since Goll made a fierce reply, the hero first in wisdom and in fame, I went up to him angrily.
Fiomn caught up Mac in Luin (his sword), two sharp spears and a shield of battle, came deftly through the host and quickly seized my arm.
Quickly my anger is quelled by Fionn, and he took upon himself my share of the prey, (saying) 'I have never allowed spite or feud to arise between two of the Fian.'
Fiomn, the brave lord, did not leave generous MacMorna of the red shields till he made peace between me and Goll, though great was our enmity and our wrath.
They made fires without fault, truly, on every hill of the mountain, around Fionn of comely body, to roast the boars and stags.
When we had eaten our prey, the battalions of ruddy complexion, the good fians of Fionn set out from Sliabh Truim to Loch Cuan.

We found a monster on the loch, its presence there did not profit us: as we beheld it in silence, its head was bigger than a hill.
Its description to relate-a fortress might stand in its maw : a hundred heroes, though great their fury, might fit in the hollows of its two eyes.
Greater than trees in a wood its teeth, shedding horrid lightning: bigger than a city's gate were the ears of the serpent awaiting us.
Longer than eight men, without belittling, was its tail, standing up to its back: its slender part was thicker than a flood-felled oak in a wood.
When it saw the host at a distance, it demanded in great rage food from the son of Muireann without delay, or combat with hounds and heroes.

- Thou art not of Ireland's monsters, wretch of evil fame and mind; tell us wherefore thou hast come,' said manly, generous Fionn.
' I have come now from Greece on my course till I reached Loch Cuan, to seek combat of the Fian, and to take the power of their hosts.
'I overpower every people, hosts have fallen by my attacks: unless I get satisfaction from you, I will not leave seed of you alive.
- Give me combat speedily, though thou art strong in hosts, O Fionn, that I may test on you exactly my strength, having come across the wave.'
'For thy honour's sake tell us, though great is thy confidence and thy awesomeness, thy father's identity and thy name, before we cast our weapons at thee.'
- A certain monster that is in Greece, I shall speak without lie his accustomed name, Crouch of the Rock, high of fame, that stands on the eastern sea.
'A reptile, good of courage, evil of countenance, such was his gruesome wife: few eastern cities but she breached ; and she bore me to him as a son.
'I have left sorrow on every prince: Height of Battle truly is my name: Fionn of good report and worth, we reck not thy hosts nor thy weapons.
'This is the tale thou hast asked of me, man good at sword and at grasp; grant me speedily the fray, though numerous thy Fian and thy strength.'
Though it was a stern enterprise, Fionn bade the Fian go to fight him : to quell him the hosts advanced, and suffered hardship from him.
The reptile came for the encampment, many of our nobles perished by him; we were greatly wasted by his slaughter, and powerless to withstand him.
Spears were cast cmmingly, accurately, fiercely, at the reptile: he scattered on us by magic art his fiery showers of spines.
We were brought to grief by the beast; his craft we could not match : he would swallow, though it was no slight strain, a hero and his gear together.
He swallowed Fionn of the strokes, and the Fian of Ireland raised a cry: we were for a space without help, and the reptile slaughtering us.
A door on each side of its body Fionn made of no ill space, till he let forth without delay every one that had been swallowed of the Fian.
Fionn by the fight he made gave succour to the entire host, and freed us by the might of arms, by fortune of battle, and of victory.
The beast and Fionn engaged each other-it was great daring to go to master it: he stayed not from its sturdy encounter till he parted its soul from its body.
What fell of monsters by Fionn, till doom may not be reckoned: what he achieved of battle and of exploits all men cannot number.
He slew the monster of Loch Neagh, and the giant of Glen Smóil, and the great reptile of Loch Cuilleann, MacCumhaill of the gold slew it.
He slew the serpent of Benn Edair: in battle it could not be mastered: the phantom and reptile of Glen Dorcha fell by the hand of the prince.

The blue serpent of the Erne fell, and the fierce serpent of Loch Riach : he slew, though it was a stout heart, a serpent and a fierce cat in Áth Cliath.
He slew the phantom of Loch Léin, it was a great endeavour to go to subdue it : he slew a phantom in Druim Cliath, a phantom and a serpent on Looch Righ.
Fionn of great heart slew the phantom of Glen Righe of the roads : there was not a reptile in Ireland's glens but he took by the force of his blows.
The phantom and serpent of Glenarm Fionn slew, though they were valiant; so that victorious Fionn exterminated every monster against which he advanced.
He slew the serpent of Loch Sileann that brought a treacherous deluge on our host, and the two serpents of Loch Foyle that made a fierce attack on us.
A shining serpent on the Shannon, it broke down the defence of the men : and the serpent of fights of Loch Ramhuir, that surpassed the monsters of the world.
He slew, it was a great good fortune, the fierce phantom of Sliabh Collán, and the two serpents of Glen Inne fell by his sword.
He slew the serpent of Loch Meilge, whose prowess was not unworthy of Fionn's hand, and the great monster of Loch Cera too, and a spectre at Áth Truim.
There was a serpent on Lough Mask that gave many defeats to the men of Fál (Ireland), he slew it with his victorious sword, though it was a fierce burden for his arm.
On Loch Laeghaire, in truth, there was a serpent that made flames: in payment of what he suffered of its ravages he beheaded it with his weapons.
The phantom of Dubhas though right sturdy and the wild man of Sliabh in Chláir, Fionn slew with Mac in Loin, though fierce their prowess and their horror.
The furious serpent of Loch Lurgan fell by Fionn of the fians; all that it destroyed of our host may not be told till distant doom.
A serpent of the singing Bann fell by the hand of Fionn of the hard encounter ; we had often been wasted by its attack until it was slain at Assaroe.

Once I was Yellow-hatred.

Once I was yellow-haired, ringleted,
Now my head puts forth only a short grey crop.
I would rather have locks of the raven's colour
Grow on my head, than a short hoary crop.
Courting belongs not to me, for I wile no women ;
To-night my hair is hoar, it will not be as once it was. Once I was.

XXVI.

Woe for them that wait on Churchaen.
Woe for them that wait on churchmen, that are not heard on the hardy fray: woe for them that are checked by decay, unsightly end of shelter.
Woe for a king's son that is faint-hearted, that imposes not his fear on man: woe for him who forsakes his pointed lance for a horned yellow staff.
Oisin am I, the prince's son: I was wont not to put off battle : to many a hero on the stead of strife I have given cause of woe.

Woe for them.

XXVII.

Oisin's Sorrow.
Sad is that, O dear Caoilte, by whom sea-roving crews were thinned, our parting from each other after the Fian is a cause of sorrow.
To fall in the east in the battle of Gabhair happily befell Mac Lughach, rather than that the youth of great deeds should be tearful and gloomy in our company.
All but myself, an ancient, despicable after all the battles, the race of Baoisene is gone-sad is that, dear Caoilte.

XXVIII.

Three Heroes went we to the Chase.

Three heroes went we to the chase on this slope of Sliabh gCua : we started a brown stag from the pearly fresh brown oakwood.
His like I never saw on this heath of Sliabh gCua, his size and the number of his antlers: a lank stag eating the young grass.
We loosed our hounds at him, we came to pierce his hide, and the stag was not stayed till he reached grassy Sliabh Mis.
I was there, and tall Oisin and Caoilte of good counsel : there were not of the Fian, as good as we, three heroes.

Three heroes.

XXIX.

Erect your Hunting Spears.
Erect your hunting spears, wherewith we once wounded the white does : when we were in arms, we made no fasting journey.
Steer ye your rounded hulls to the bare knolls of Lochlainn; with your stout lances we slew slow-glancing Raighne.
I am Oisin, though ancient: I have trysted with gentle women : grayness is nearest to brownness, bentness is nearest to erectness.

Erect.
XXX.

The Hunger of Crionloca's Church.
The hunger of Crínloch's church, ūch, I cannot bear it ; last of the royal prince's sons, we have suffered a scanty fare.
Oscar, my heroic son, for whom songs of praise were made, were he alive at present, he would not leave me to hunger.
My curse upon thy churchmen, Patrick, and mayest thou rot! if I had Oscar, he would not leave me to hunger.
I am Oisin ruddy-cheeked, son of Fionn, of honourable spirit: I have had in my pay twenty hundred that knew no hunger.

The hunger.

The Wry Rowan.

Swineherd, let us make for the moorland : I am without food for three days: lead before me toGleann Da Ghealt: come, my son, and take my hand.
There is on the north side of the glen, if we were both brought thither, a tree whose berries are good to taste, which is named the Wry Rowan.
If thou wert nine days without food-I tell thee, it is no foolish thought it would relieve thy dryness and thy thirst, when thou shouldst see the colour of the berries.
We were two thousand in the hunting on the slope beside the hill : we brought in no prey to Fionn but the berries of the tree and two swine.

Swineherd.

The Beagle's Cry.

A beagle's cry on the hill of kings ! the mound it circles is dear to me: we often had a fians' hunting feast between the moorland and the sea.
Here were the followers of Fionn, a company to whom the sounds of strings were sweet: dear to me the active band that went on hostings of many hundreds.
Fair to see was their chase, methinks : many red stags fell by their prowess : many a speckled speedy hound coming to meet them on the moor.
Bran and beautiful Sceolang, his own hounds, in the king's hand: dearly Fionn loved the hounds, good was their courage and their achievement.
Crú Dheireoil in the king's bosom, good son of Lugh of comely form : he kept playing a harp for Fionn, the fair-haired man of strong voice.

Each leader of nine of the Fian used to come to the king to hold the great huntings that the host made around Druim Caoin.
Fifty many-antlered stags fell by my own hand, 0 king, and fifty boars likewise, though to-night there is nothing mine.
The sons of stout Rónán had a camp on this north side of the glen : a goodly sight was the Fenian cooking that the Fians made at the foot of the peaks.
The race of Morna, an active band, with many a man on the southern side: often they fought a bardy fray and came victorious out of it.
I have heard a red beagle's cry on the slope beside the stream : it has raised the waves of my head, the sweet-voiced beagle's bay.
I am Oisin the king's son : it is long since my form has withered: although my heart is sore, nevertheless the cry is musical to me.

A beagle's cry.

XXXIII.

The Sleep-Song for Diarmaid.
Sleep a little, a little little, for thou needst not fear the least, lad to whom I have given love, son of Ó Duibhne, Diarmaid.
Sleep thou soundly here, offspring of Duibhne, noble Diarmaid: I will watch over thee the while, son of shapely $\dot{O}$ Duibhne.
Sleep a little, a blessing on thee! above the water of the spring of Trénghart, little lamb of the land above the lake, from the womb of the country of strong torrents.
Be it even as the sleep in the south of Dedidach of the high poets, when he took the daughter of ancient Morann in spite of Conall from the Red Branch.
Be it even as the sleep in the north of fair comely Finnchadh of Assaroe, when he took stately Sláine in spite of Failbhe Hardhead.
Be it even as the sleep in the west of Aine daughter of Gailian, what time she fared by torchlight with Dubhthach from Doirinis.

Be it even as the sleep in the east of Degha gallant and proud, when he took Coinchenn daughter of Binn in spite of fierce Dechell of Duibhreann.
0 fold of valour of the world west from Greece, over whom I stay (?) watching, my heart will well-nigh burst if I see thee not at any time.
The parting of us twain is the parting of children of one home, is the parting of body with soul, hero of bright Loch Carmain.
Caoinche will be loosed on thy track : Caoilte's running will not be amiss : never may death or dishonour (?) reach thee, never leave thee in lasting sleep.
This stag eastward sleepeth not, ceaseth not from bellowing: though he be in the groves of the blackbirds, it is not in his mind to sleep.
The hornless doe sleepeth not, bellowing for her spotted calf : she runs over the tops of bushes, she does not sleep in her lair.
The lively linnet (?) sleepeth not in the tops of the fair-curved trees: it is a noisy time there, even the thrush does not sleep.
The duck of numerous brood sleepeth not, she is well prepared for good swimming : she maketh neither rest nor slumber there, in her lair she does not sleep.
To-night the grouse (?) sleepeth not up in the stormy heaths of the height: sweet is the sound of her clear cry: between the streamlets she does not sleep.

Fionn's Prophecy.

Woman that speakest to us the lay, two things most have overcome me: a vision of shapes has appeared to me, has reft me of my strength and my reason.
The Adze-head will come over the babbling sea: I deem it no harm, he will not be harmful to me; he will bless Ireland round about and the glorious warfare will begin ; his miracles will be forever, and he will bring all to Heaven.

The books of learning will be here during the sway of the foreigners and before their time: cemeteries and churches the King will have, great will be their power together; it will be good for erery man that it reaches, will bear many to the house of God.
Listen ye to the prophecy of Fionn above the pool, and hide it not: the lime-washed stones (castles) will be, not weakly they will be made.
It is not this that grieves me, but the number of the grey-faced foreigners here, and that I and the Fian shall not exist and I myself driving them out.
The foreigners' gardens will be here, and many a tree a-planting, and herbs a-putting down and coming up from their roots.
The high-king will advance from the north, will sternly wage the battle, and will raise up his wrath, and will leave the (field of) battle red.
The Irish will rise hardily, alike in east and north and south, it grieves me that it may not be I who come, when the shout of the men will be raised.
The high-king will cast the stone, and many an "och" will be there: it grieves me that I cannot come, when the shout of the foreigners will be raised.
A foreigner will not wait for his children as he goes in his ship over the brine : few of them will escape through the number of the famous battles.
Round Sligo a battle will be fought from which will come he advantage of the bright Irish : it is unlikely that I shall be present, much it grieves me, 0 woman.
First psalmist of the Irish am I; the Son of God will bear me to Heaven : though I have had many of them, I dislike the nature of women.
I am Fionn son of noble Cumball; I believe in the King of the Heavens; I am the best prophet under the sun, though I have done the will of women.

Woman.

XXXV.  The War-Vaunt of Goll.

Lone am I on this crag, though I am overcome with hunger, since to-night there is with me but one poor woe-begone woman.
Thirty full days I have been without food or sleep, without music of harps, without timpáns hemmed in on the crag.
Thirty hundred true warriors have fallen by my hand in that timeit is a great sign of madness-and yet to be drinking brine after them!
I was the deed-vaunting champion: I have a waist of bone: I was golden-weaponed Iollann, to-night I am Goll the unsightly.
Fionn son of Cumhall, Fenian prince, has driven me to the crag: my career of victory is glorious, this is the cause of his enmity.
Trénmhór of encounters perished by the might of my fierce hand, for there was none to go between us until I slew him by my stroke.
Cumball valorous, victorious, perished by me in the battle of Cnucha: as much of his haughtiness as I lowered. I am paying for it now.
In the strenuous battle of Cronnmhoin, though many a hero opposed me I slew ten hundred right raliant, the followers of Caireall, in onset.
Through Conblrón's white-skinned son I drove the head of my spear : towards me never again was he insensate in the house of Almha.
Two of the sons of the chief prince, Fionn son of Cumball the joyful-to me it was long of evil omen that I slew them in the middle of the bog.
The command of Ireland was mine till Cumhall came: I did not spare his flesh, since I did not enjoy his favour.
It was wrongful for Fionn of Almhain, for the proud fulfilment of a word, on ascount of avenging my ill-treatment, to drive me to famine.
With thrice fifty gallant heroes came Cumball to Tara: so high was his spirit, he would have broad Banbha for his own.

Magnificent Conn of the Hundred Battles was then king of yew-clad Ireland : many a strong strait I suffered to subdue his foes.
Heroic Cathaoir, bold high-king of Ireland, and ten hundred men perished woefully at my hands in the battle of Magh Agha.
A brother's son to this Cumhall, the son of U'na of brilliant beauty, Conn was not willing to uphold me in spite of Cumhall and these Fians.
Were it not for the tie of kindred between them and this king, though strong was the House of Baoisgne, they would not have made terms with me.
A sister of lordly Cumball was foster-mother to this Conn, from this came my displacement, and my sad departure from Ireland.
The kingship of the Galian fifth (Leinster) Conn gave to skinwhite Cumhall, it was no omen of peaceful rule or courage to be mine.
On a day that I held a great hunting around Cuilleann 0 gCuanach, I beheld Cumball approach haughtily to forbid me.
The house of valorous Morna, Cumhall fell to rending us: it was not a just casting of lots that satisfied him, but combat.
To beautiful Sliabh Eibhlinne we retired in spite of Cumball: we left not a man behind, and three hundred fell of his company.
Thereafter we went to rampart-smooth Cruacha of Connacht: a panting march was ours, with Cumball pressing on us.
At his foster-son's demand, Conall of fair Cruachain refused us shelter: for us it was omen of utter rout, that Cumball forced so many to oust us.
We went right rapidly forward to Emhain Nhacha, and pleaded a lasting compact with the lord of Ulster at this time.
Ulster's king did not venture to keep us for fear of Cumball; this were a sad change, should the strong man come against us.
'To Conn with acclaim we went to Tara's rampart: he was not gracious toward̉s us, it was no cause for us to be courageous.
The king of side-green Tara then refused us; woe for him that abandoned our noble band : therewith we left Ireland.

In our heary-laden ships we went to the land of the Welsh: when we had fought a battle there, we left our enemy diminished.
The sovereignty of the over-sea border I nobly assumed: though to-night I have but one woman-friend in loneliness.
A year and a quarter in that sovereignty I was-it was no presage of combat when the folk of the island of outlaws sent tidings of us to Cumhall.
Cumball the brave and prudent, and the chiefs of the Munstermen, the men of Leinster of bold engagements and the unforgetting fian of Ireland.
The mighty companies came to drive me out of the land of Wales: it was not a likely cause of my being fittingly upheld.
We gave stern battle to each other at that time: to me Banbha's host were not friends, they were as though frantic.
Cumball, Bodhmann the woman-warrior, valiant Criomhthann the spoiler, in the lead of the fians of Banbha, added to my career of battles.
The Welshmen were not friends to me, they set upon me togetherthat increased my bitterness-the stout folk of the island.
The slaughter of the host right valiantly I achieved in that fight: to them it was an omen of long plunderings, the number that I slew at the time.
Twenty hundred brave heroes fell by me in that fight of the host of Cumhall of broad Banbha and of the warriors of Wales.
From that overthrow (?) I covered my retreat without delay : since I found no protection I go from them over sea.
To the islands of free Lochlainn we went after all the spoiling, there I found no peace, it was an evil path for us.
The hosts of the warlike land approach us to banish us: to quell their strong men was not easy for our being few.
We gave a close-fought battle to the fearless men of Lochlainn : bravely I slew in fury the king of Lochlainn.
Eight hundred of the warlike host perished by me in truth: my expedition was not feeble until I took his sovereignty.
A while I spent in their islands levying rent and tribute, the courteous sons of Morna boldly ruling the lands.

We were betrayed-it was not done amiss-to the same Cumhall : a foreign army came against us, and we left them grieving.
We gave battle gloriously to the fearless battalions ; many were in evil plight through me, and we ourselves were full of wounds.
Fifteen hundred dexterously I slew of this host: I left them in a heap of bones, though to-night I am lonely.
Into our swift ships we went without delay: they took no hostages of me once I had put to sea.
We turned our face to the Scotsmen, it was not a favourable path for us: the oversea men came to drive us away in banishment.
A furious (?) battle was fought between us and the host of Alba: they were hard to check for the comely weapon-bearing Fian.
I advanced right eagerly to where I saw the victorious king, for I was vengeful for the dishonour of my friends.
A pitiless combat was waged between me and the king of Alba, wherein I smote with a clean stroke his head from the renowned king.
I left the king's host hewn to the bone in the same battle: I was high in spirit after engagements and exploits.
Four glorious years I was in the kingship of Alba: I cannot remember all I got of gold and silver.
Once that we held a chase through valleys deep and dense, it was a cause of rue to us, our foes coming between us and the sea.
Cumhall the majestic came, with the well-graced host of the islands : the men of Alba abandoning us did not cause us to be overvaliant.
[Stanza 57 to be read in the text after 59.]
Battle to Cumhall, vaunter of triumphs, I gave without delay : there fell by me in combats ten hundred to sate my eagerness.
I embarked my great household in their ships in spite of the foe: we made loud rejoicing having escaped from all peril.
We go adventurously to the wide haven of London: we were still formidable, though we had suffered many hardships.
There came a stout encountering host to drive us from that same haven : it was no path of peacemaking for them, when we caused them to regret.

On the fair-green of the royal city we brought the heroic battalions : then full of vengeance against the foe were my Fians.
Right rapidly were breached the firm ramparts of London: suddenly the host advanced, it was a straitened path for us.
The king of the Saxons courageously challenged me in the fray: I refused not his whole household, and I shunned not their hostility.
At last in the end of the engagement the powerful ruler fell, though it is no dishonourable tale, it was a heavy task for me.
Two score hundred Saxons I slew of them undauntedly: and I left them in such evil shape, that but the tidings of them remain.
The power of England we held a while in peace, and the foe in deep distress from myself and my friends.
Hard-weaponed Cumhall came, and the Fian of Ireland without delay, and according as we heard, the host of the islands along with them.
The right wrathful warrior gave us battle after his journey: I was the vengeful overthrower of every sept.
Three score hundred, armed for battle, swiftly perished by my hand, for the Saxons did not dare to follow me or go before me.
I covered my retreat after the overthrow: I did not abandon my followers till I got them into their ships.
Then we sailed onward to the land of France ; the passage was made musical by the cold birds of the sea.
The hosts of spacious France came upon us at this time-a tale that is meet in brevity-on a few of the host of Banbha.
An heroic battle to be vaunted we gave to each other, our expedition gained high renown from the host that came against us.
The sovereignty of generous sprightly France was mine indeed until my pursuer came, Cumball who made no treaty.
The victorious host of Europe was around Cumhall, the men of Ireland advancing actively, for me they had no good friendship.
They joined in hostile fray with us after our journey: my noisy arrowy host answered them as they saw them.

It was a fine and valorous battle that we gave to each other, my noisy, arrowy host, till we inflicted slaughter on their Fian.
Criomball, Bodhmann, the woman-warrior, and the nobles of the House of Trénmhór, kept around the Fenian chief that I might get no opportunity.
Fifteen hundred triumphantly I laid low of their hosts : against them I made good defence, it is another glory of my successes.
From that overthrow at length I covered my retreat: though today upon the crag my body is covered with wounds, I will not keep it silent.
In their heavy-laden ships I embark my little Fian : I advanced on this journey till I reached the haven of Bergen.
The valiant king of Lochlainn with all his host was in the place: we obtained their sovereignty then for the dread of my blade.
Four lengthy years I spent in the kingship of Bergen; their friendship I obtained, and Bergen's gold and silver.
Cumball the quarrelsome went to war with the high-king of Banbha, whereby he left in distress (?) Conn of the Hundred Battles, brave though he was.
Heroic Conn despatched envoys for us to Bergen : we came this time to the plain of Cruachain in haste.
Conn of the Hundred Battles supported the race of Morna on this occasion : we advanced boldly then to the battle of Cnucha.
The men of Munster in warlike guise came to the same battle, and the men of Leinster vengefully, bravely by Cumhall's side.
Two hundred bold Munstermen, two hundred Leinstermen this time, two hundred Fenians of manly encounter came to master me at Cnucha.
I slew with active valour the six hundred I relate: I bethought me of my ill-treatment, and I gave no quarter.
My friendship was warlike then towards valiant Cumball; to part us would not have been easy for the fierce men of Banbha.
An eager wounding thrust I drove into the warrior's breast; his heart was riven by me, having empurpled my spears.
The Munstermen fled before me until I reached Fiodh Gaibhle: long in . . . graves shall lie all that I slew without quarter.

Bodhmann the woman-warrior and Crimall came to stay me: it was an omen of war for me leaving the battle of Cnucha.
Though fortunate the House of Trénmhór, there lived not to cross the Liffey but only one woeful eight and Bodhmann in fury.
The warriors of valiant Leinster, I followed them without faintness, I was their utter destroyer till I reached Fiodh Dorcha.
I gathered their booty and went to Tara: having avenged my wrongs, I was full of courage.
The headship of the Fians of this Banbha was given to me by skinwhite Conn: this was a great profit to me as long as he fulfilled it.
I ordered in readiness the bands of Ireland and Scotland, I gave them noble terms, since on me they had cast their lot.
I gave favourable hire to the chiefs of the host of Banbha; that company kept not faith with me, having enjoyed my profit.
I left no hideous monster in lake or linn in Banbha that I did not nobly slay-it was another glory of my profit.
There was no insensate spectre, there was no phantom yet nor evil shape in Ireland through my strong search but was slain by me thereafter.
There was no mighty fleet in my time on the sea of Fódla that I did not dismember-it is another part of my service.
Ten years I was Fenian king over the Fians of Ireland: I kept no ill-minded man and I did no treachery.
The rule of the Fians was taken from me by Conn of the Hundred Battles, who gave it with strong affection to Fionn son of Cumball after me.
Conn in lordly fashion divided the Fian between us, a cause of confederacy; he left a third to me and two-thirds to the son of Cumball.
We passed a time of peace after our confederacy with each other, and I used to receive tributes from the host of the city of Bergen.
From Hallowtide till May I supported the entire Fian : our spirit was heightened by banqueting and playing games.
The chase of Corann of the hillocks was held by us without refraining: long will the story hold of the evil encounters I sustained.

Fionn fetched a sudden halt on the summit of Sliabh Seghsa : it is a tale to be told for long, the three that came to meet him.
Three phantom sprites came out of the side of the hill: devilish was the guise of the women : they spell-bound my companions.
Three black unsightiy mouths, six white eyes never closing, three red bristling heads of hair, six twisting legs under them.
Three warlike swords, three shields with their three spears-it was no easy task to gaze on the women or their gear.
Rough grey iron of wizardry they had mounted on poles: giddiness and faint sickness came over Fionn and the Fian at the sight of them.
With magic of evil dealing they spell-bound our chief; they left Fionn thereafter a withered quaking ancient.
The seven battalions of the Standing Fian they brought into the same plight around the door of the bone-strewn Céis, but only me alone.
The whole Fian was swiftly bound with success-it is not a tale to be ever told-and they were cast into a house underground.
They seize their three bright blades to hew the Fian to the bone: they would have had but other men's heads on them, had I not been quicker.
The combat of those three hags I took on myself alone; a mighty fray was that struggling in the entrance of the hill of Seghais.
My stroke was fierce and powerful, for I left no leavings, when I smote with it bravely Camóg and Cuilleann.
Courageously I bound Iornach fast in fetter: to overcome her was not easy until I brought her to grief.
The Fian of Ireland in ruinous plight she brought out herself in fear of being hewn to the bone by the edge of my sharp blade.
This evil sprite was forced to put them into their own shapes for dread of her undoing : thus the tidings are told.
Fiomn comes forth released, and the Fian in a rout: scant was my terror, though to-night I am lonely.
Right speedily the abode was burned by me with fierceness: I left in black ashes that house at the foot of the Céis.
Iarnach of horrid locks angrily followed Fionn and his Fian and, bold of body, demanded single combat courageously of Fionn.

Fionn the Fenian chief found no man to fight the treacherous warsprite till I went in my battle-gear, when I saw Fionn in a strait.
Though her combat was mad, I overcame her without hardship : by clean force I cut her head off with my blue blade.
Conarán son of Caimidel of the shapely Tuath Dé Danann was the father of the three wild women whom I left lifeless.
Friendship and alliance by marriage Fionn made with me after this conflict: it abated my vengefulness until they slew Fedha.
Fedha, his daughter's son, perished at Fionn's hands through pride : he was the son of all-bright Cainche: without him I am lonely.

Lone am I.

The Irise Texts Society was established in 1898 for the purpose of publishing texts in the Irish language, accompanied by such introductions, English translations, glossaries, and notes as might be deemed desirable.

The Annual Subscription has been fixed at $7 \delta .6 d$. (American subscribers, two dollars), payable on January 1st of each year, on payment of which Members will be entitled to receive the Annual Volume of the Society, and any additional volumes which they may issue from time to time.

Vols. I., II., and III. are now out of print, but Vols. iv. and v., "Keating's History" (Part r.), and "The Martial Career of Congal Clairingneach," can still be obtained by new Members joining the Society at the original Subscription of 78. 6d. for each year (1901-2).

The Committee make a strong appeal to all interested in the preservation and publication of Irish Manuscripts to join the Society and to contribute to its funds, and especially to the Editorial Fund, which has been established for the remuneration of Editors for their arduous work.

All communications should be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, Miss Eleanor Hull, 20, Hanover-square, London, W.

IRISH TEXTS SOCIETY.

The Ninth Annual General Meeting of the Society was held on April 30th, 1907, at 20, Hanover Square.

Mr. James Buckley (Chairman of Council) in the Chair.
The Minutes of the last Annual Meeting having been taken as read, the Hon. Secretary presented the ## NINTH ANNUAL REPORT.

The Council are glad to be able to lay on the table their new volume, the Rev. George Calder's edition of the Irish Version of Virgil's Aneid, which members will receive as the publication for 1903. They hope to follow this up by issuing at an early date the second and third volumes of the text and translation of Keating's History of Ireland, which will form the annual volumes for the years 1904 and 1905.

At the date of our last Annual Meeting negotiations had been entered into with Mr. Thomas O'Malley for the continuation of the work, but, owing to his subsequent engagements in England, the project had to be abandoned. The Council believe their subscribers will share the satisfaction that they themselves feel on hearing that the Rev. P. S. Dinneen, m.a., has consented to lay aside his other work, and to devote the entire year to the endeavour to complete the remaining portion of the text and translation of Keating.

It is most desirable that this edition of the Forus Feasa should be followed up by a fourth volume containing the genealogies appearing in Keating's uss., with notes upon the whole work; but the Council are not at present in a position to undertake the outlay that this extra volume would entail.

The loss of their old friend, Mr. Darid Comyn, the editor of the first volume of Keating's History, is much regretted by the Council. He passed away within a week of the date on which he handed over to Father Dinneen the notes and materials that he had collected for the continuation of the work.

Mr. MacNeill's edition of the Duanaire Fhinn is practically ready, and will shortly be issued.

A mong fresh works accepted this year by the Society are the Life St. Declan, edited by the Rer. P. Power, f.r.s.A. (Ireland), from a manuscript in the Burgundian Library at Brussels, and a collection of the poems of Darid O'Bruadar, edited by the Rev. J. MacErlean, s.r.

Other offers of work are under consideration.
The new edition of O'Rahilly's Poems, revised by Mr.T. O'Donoghue, is in the press; but this rolume will not be issued gratis to members who have already received the 1901 edition. It will be obtainable ly members at the cost of one annual subscription, $78.6 d$., and by nonmembers at $10 s .6 d$. This edition will contain sereral additional poems of O'Rahilly.

There is a very steady demand for the Society's Dictionary; and, in riew of ultimately issuing a completely revised edition, prizes amounting to $£ 25$ and a limited number of interleared copies of the Dictionary have been offered by the Council for lists of words not contained in the present volume. The date for sending in the lists has been extended, and there is a prospect that useful lists will be submitted for competition.

The number of Members is 726 .
The Einancial Statement was then read by Mr. Samucl Boyle, Hon. Treasurer.

[^0]:    ${ }^{1}$ In the Christian and Pre-Norman Period, Ireland was dominated by two great dynastic families, one having Tara, the other Cashel, as chief centre. In a series of papers in the New lreland Review during 1906, I have shown that these two dynastic races appear to be of comparatively recent pre-Christian origin, the story of the "Milesian invasion" being devieed to credit them with a spurious antiquity. As the doctrine of descent from Mile or "Milesius" of Spain seems in its earliest form peculiar to these races, I have called them Milesians for want of any better term that would describe them in common.

[^1]:    ${ }^{1}$ The title of palter, Irish sultair, appears apllicable in Early lrish to any considerable compilation in verse. But the Psalter of Cashel seems to have contained also prose tales and pedigrees.

[^2]:    ${ }^{1}$ Except in the case of the orerkingdoni of Oriel, which has no poem of tributes. This may be explained by the fact that Oriel had long ceased to enjoy suzerain powers, having berome a derendency of Cineal Eoghain.

[^3]:    ${ }^{\prime}$ L.U. Fotha Catha Cnucha, \&e.

[^4]:    ${ }^{1}$ I use this term to designate the dynastic races of Tara and Cashel in the historical period. They cannot have risen into prominence long before St. Patrick's time.
    "The occurrence is symbolised in the story of the "recovery" of Táin B6 Cualnge.

[^5]:    ${ }^{1}$ Magh Maen, in south Connacht, was their home.
    ${ }^{2}$ The episode of the sickness, as Mr. Nutt urges upon me, can hardly have been a mere literary device. The device lay in the use made of the episode.

[^6]:    ${ }^{1}$ I refer here to the mythological features of the narrative. As a matter of fact, the durect link with mythological story is. if anything, stronger in the Fenian than in the Ulidian legend.

[^7]:    ${ }^{1}$ Asberaid araile 7 is fior sin gurab do Uibh Tairrsigh do Uibh Failge dho. Aithechtuath na hUi Tairrsigh ; do Luaighnibh Temhrach ; dferaib Cul Bregh do sunnradh iad; 7 ase sin an treas teallach o ngabhthaoi ri-fendecht Erenn, ar ba ri ar Buaighnibh no ar Luaighnibh ri fhian Erenn.

[^8]:    ${ }^{1}$ Ba do Luaghnibh do ocus ise ba rí $f[$ oraib] air ba huaidhibh sen no gebthe cennus ai[thech.]

[^9]:    ${ }^{1}$ In the Book of Ballymote, between the two lists, come these words: Aicmeda na nathach insin. A tuatha inso. "The foregoing are the septs of the vassals. The following are their tuaths."

[^10]:    ${ }^{1}$ In the notes on this passage, $B=$ Book of Ballymote, $H=H .3 .17$, $\mathrm{M}=$ Mac Fir Bhisigh, Book of Genealogies. B and M commence at Gaileoin. Unimportant variants are not noted. ${ }^{2}$ Egdha H. ${ }^{3}$ Ochmain H. Fochmhuind M. ${ }^{4}$ Athachda H, M. ${ }^{5}$ Fochmaine H. Fochmhuinn M. 6 'Anas dir di di finib' must have been hard to decipher in the original. $\quad \mathbf{B}$ has 'anas dir di i finib.' H has 'isasdadmaib.' M has 'mairtinibh no maidirdinibh.' ${ }^{7}$ Athachda $\mathbf{H}$. Achda no athachda M. ${ }^{8}$ Figda H. ${ }^{9}$ Uib Failghe M. ${ }^{10}$ Luigne H. Luighne M. ${ }^{11}$ isne da Delba B. ${ }^{12}$ Cuais H. ${ }^{23}$ ocus omitted B.
